Historical Note

The College of Puget Sound is a private, coeducational liberal arts college located in Tacoma, Washington. It was founded in 1886 and is the oldest institution of higher education west of the Rocky Mountains.

The college was established by a group of Seattle businessmen and pastors who were concerned about the spiritual and economic needs of the developing region. They were inspired by the example of other college founders, such as Dr. D. L. Lownsdale, who had founded the University of Washington in 1862.

The college was initially known as the University of Puget Sound, and it began with a mission to provide a campus for the Olympia Collegiate Institute, which had been founded in 1853. The institute was moved to Tacoma in 1869, and the college was founded in 1886 with a grant of $65,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The college was housed in a small frame building, and its first classes were held in September 1887. The school had an enrollment of 15 students and a faculty of two.

In 1887, the school was named the University of Puget Sound. The name change was made to honor the region's natural beauty and the influence of the Puget Sound area on the college's development.

The college continued to grow and develop over the years, and it eventually became known as the University of Puget Sound.

In 1964, the college adopted its current form, the College of Puget Sound. It is now a private, coeducational liberal arts college located in Tacoma, Washington.

The college is known for its strong emphasis on liberal arts education, and its commitment to providing a diverse and inclusive learning environment for all students.

Today, the college enrolls approximately 2,500 students, and it offers a wide range of undergraduate and graduate degree programs in many fields of study.

The college is located in the heart of Tacoma, a city with a rich history and culture. The city is known for its beautiful parks, beaches, and museums, and it is home to many cultural institutions.

The college's mission is to provide a world-class education that prepares students for success in their chosen fields and in life.
