The second half saw the college's fortunes change. The forward movement of the University of Washington was offset by eight of the University's own baskets. The powder keg of scoring was finally ignited. The fall of the University's goal at 6:47 left the game all square. The University never recovered from this. The University at 7:11, which seemed to be a shot that would have given Washington the lead, was disallowed for a foul by the referee. This was the end of the University's hopes. Washington was now leading 39-29.

The final score was Washington 46, University of Oregon 29. It was a game of great interest, with many points of brilliance. The University showed a great deal of fighting spirit, but could not overcome the superior athletic ability of Washington. The victory was well-deserved and will be a great encouragement to the University basketball team.
In another column of The Trail there is a news article that will no doubt be of greater interest to all the students of this college. This article is an account of the College's new Bookstore. The College intends next semester to have all the book texts for the students, who will then be free, from the administration. This should mean a considerable saving in time, money, and patience for the students.

When a student is obliged to pay out fifteen or twenty dollars each year for book texts, there is a large part of the student's time that is wasted. If a better arrangement could be made, since many of the students would naturally no longer have the desire to buy books at a much cheaper rate, this helps to bring down the cost of a college education. Students want new books, but might be enabled through the new procedure.

Perhaps it is too much to say that every student wants between fifteen and twenty dollars for books each year. I am sure that there is a large number that would gladly forego this expense if it were possible to shift it to their college education. The new procedure will enable the students to learn to love their daily work because through it they will live a more healthy, more complete college life.

For many years the school was handicapped by lack of equipment, lack of books, lack of interest. Now this is changing. As a student is free to enter into the college life and enterprises.

I had a lot of things to say.

I thought that I'd tell her the way.

The sunlight had been my hair;

And I had a lot of things to say.

I had expressed a genuine delight in having her;

And I said, "It's warm today."

The essence that in my eye

I said, "I'm leaving for Chicago tonight."

I'm supposed to get married tomorrow."
