Graduated Scholarship Method

Outlined By John Grier Hibben

Head of Princeton University

Editor\'s Note: The following are excerpts from a speech by John Grier Hibben, head of Princeton University, delivered at the University of Washington. The speech outlined a new method of awarding scholarships to students.

"In conclusion, I wish to emphasize that the purpose of the university is to educate the individual student and to prepare him for a useful life. The university is not a factory to be filled with students, nor is it a storehouse to be emptied of its contents. The university is a living organism, and it should be so conducted as to contribute to the individual education of its members."

"I am confident that the university can provide a better education for its students by a system of scholarships than by a competitive examination system. The scholarship system will enable the university to select the best students and to give them the education they need.

"In the future, the university will award scholarships to students on the basis of their scholastic record and personal qualities. The scholarships will be awarded after careful consideration of the student's academic and extracurricular activities. The scholarships will be renewable, and the student will be required to maintain a satisfactory scholastic record.

"I believe that the scholarship system will provide a better education for the students and will enable the university to select the best students. I urge the university to adopt this system as soon as possible."

The Rhodes Scholarship

Helen O'ne

What is the Rhodes Scholarship and what value is it to the recipient? This question is confusing and requires a clear explanation. It is not unusual to find that the value of a college education is not always appreciated, particularly among young people.

The Rhodes Scholarships were established in 1879 by the philanthropist Joseph Henry Davis. They were designed to provide financial support for outstanding college students from the United States, Canada, and South Africa to attend the University of Oxford in England.

The Rhodes Scholarship is considered one of the most prestigious scholarships in the world. It offers full tuition, room, board, and a stipend to cover living expenses.

The selection process is highly competitive, and applicants must demonstrate exceptional academic achievement, leadership, and character.

The Rhodes Scholarship provides a unique opportunity for students to gain exposure to the global community, learn from diverse perspectives, and develop their leadership skills.

The current expenditure account shows that the college has made major investments in the past year. The college has also increased its endowment, which is critical for its long-term sustainability.
