FOOTBALL: MCLAIN WELLS FOR THE HISTORIC CENTER

It is 3:45 p.m. and the girl in the white sweater and blue shorts is leaning against the fence that separates the practice field from the outer world. She is cooling off after a hard workout and thinking about what she did right and what she did wrong.

On the field, with the sunsetting behind her, she watches the boys running plays and practicing for the upcoming game. She watches as her teammates work on their techniques and strategy. The coach is yelling instructions and motivating them to do their best.

Off the field, she is thinking about her own future. She wonders if she will continue playing football in college. She knows that it will be a difficult decision, but she is confident in her abilities and eager to take on the challenges that lie ahead.

NEW COOK WANTED

SALARIES SUCCESSFUL TO DIFFICULT TO CHOOSE

The school’s athletic director was searching for a new head coach for the football team. The search had been ongoing for several weeks, and the athletic director was growing impatient.

The director had received applications from several candidates, but none of them seemed to be the right fit. The director was concerned that the school was not attracting the best candidates, and that the team was not receiving the attention it deserved.

The athletic director was considering several factors when making the decision. He knew that the new coach would need to have a strong track record of success, but he was also concerned about the team’s budget and the school’s ability to provide support.
