Greek-Letter System of Nominations Has Beneficial Elements for Election

With student body officers soon to be elected, every sorority and fraternity seems to be supporting a different candidate. Every organization fills petitions for its members for at least two or more offices.

At first glance this type of politics may seem unfair, but closer scrutiny reveals that the benefits of such a system are great. From the viewpoint of the student body as a whole, the benefits are especially substantial.

The duties involved in filling ASCP's offices are many and varied. The student body as a whole is required to spend much time and effort in the nominating process. It is this time and effort that makes the election of student body officers so important.

Many responsible and capable students would be reluctant to run for office because the duties and effort required would be too much. In this way the "good of the fraternity" are the sole factors in persuading some students to run.
