Thursday, June 22nd

9:00am-9:10am -- Conference Opening -- Ed Roberts Campus, Atrium

Welcome remarks from Ken Cerniglia (LMDA President, @kencerniglia) and Corianna Moffatt (VP of Conferences, @fromthecor) ***

9:10am-10:15am -- Plenary -- Ed Roberts Campus, Atrium

Conversation Kickstarter Panel ***

Moderator: Ken Cerniglia (@kencerniglia)

Panelists: Carmen Morgan (artEquity Founder and Director, @art_equity), Patrick Dooley (Shotgun Players Artistic Director, @ShotgunDooley), Gretchen Feyer (Berkeley Playhouse Managing Director), Karen Altree Piemme (Red Ladder Theatre Company Artistic Director), Mina Morita (Crowded Fire Theater Artistic Director, @crowdedfire) and Martine Kei Green-Rogers (LMDA President-Elect, @martinekei).

To launch our conference tackling questions of “Access, Activism, and Art,” LMDA President Ken Cerniglia will engage a panel of local and national leaders to articulate the most vital challenges facing artists in 2017.

Thursday, June 22nd

10:30am-12:00 pm -- Concurrent Session (Roundtable) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Atrium

Pathways to Revolution:

Roundtable on Activism and Access with Local Theatres ***

Moderator: Jeff Janisheski (Cal Rep, @Cal_Rep)

Panelists: SK Kerastas, Thomas Freeland, Sonia Fernandez, Amy Brooks (@bourbonswan)

In this roundtable discussion, dramaturgs and literary managers from a variety of local theatres will talk about how their work – from their education/outreach programs to their productions – is grappling with America’s politically divided landscape. How can theatre have a voice in this post-truth, Trumpian era? What dramaturgical strategies are we using to reframe and rethink the plays we do? How can we make theatre, to quote Eve Ensler, “a pathway to revolution....a refuge for the vulnerable, for telling stories of the invisible, for resisting the tyrannical, for imagining the new story.”

10:30am-12:00pm -- Concurrent Session (Presentations) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher A

“We don’t shut up.”: The Dramaturgy of the Flint Water Crisis

Performative Lecture by Jen Plants (@jenplants):

Surrounded by 20% of the world’s fresh water supply, water contaminated by heavy metals flowed from the faucets of the citizens of Flint, Michigan, for over a year from 2014-2015. As of now, over 2 years since the beginning of the crisis, Flint water is still not drinkable. One of the major hubs of 20th-century industrialization, Flint has been both at the cutting edge of technological and societal change, as well as the center of an auto industry whose mission has profoundly changed the future of this planet. The impact of lead poisoning on the city, its children, its culture and economy will be felt for decades to come. By offering both performance and framing, Jen Plant (U of Wisconsin-Madison) will share the dramaturgy of her ongoing documentary theatre project about the Flint water crisis. Using the principles of both verbatim and found-text assemblage, she’ll explore how documentary forms of theatre a) offer environmentally sound methods of artistic communication, and b) create opportunities for multiple access points in order to turn “making like an audience” into “acting like an activist.”

All The World's A Rage: Theater of Revolt and Dramaturging Social Insurrection

Presentation by Vivian Chace:

This multi-media slideshow by Vivian Chace examines the theatricality of mass resistance across the globe, focusing on flamboyant acts of defiance. We explore these exploits, from street protests, to court trials, to riots, for their dramatic traits, trace their theatrical origins, and ultimately examine why looking at these demonstrations as performance pieces is a useful axis of analysis. Heading into the times ahead, it is more important than ever we as theater-makers recognize the theatricality of resilience. This presentation examines how we've utilized our creative urges in the past, so that we may continue boldly into the future.

10:30am-12:00pm -- Concurrent Session (Praxis) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher B

Failing To Transform: Explorations of Creative Failure & Emergent Strategy

Session Leaders: mia susan amir and Davey Samuel Calderon (Playwrights Theatre Centre)

We face a historic moment of unparalleled political, economic, cultural, and ecological crisis. Never before have we needed the cultural capacity to fail – which is to say vision, create, excavate, revise, and transform – more urgently than we do now. This praxis session will invite us to engage with specific sites of failure in our creative work. Through embodied practices, writing prompts, and mapping exercises, we will interact with these sites to unearth the ways in which failure works as a generative tool, widening our ability to tolerate uncertainty, invest in loss, and engage in creative-risk taking. We will explore how and where the artist's competency in the work of creative failure intersects with the work of movements for social and environmental justice in our local communities, in the development of emergent strategies for transformation; and, the critical role of forging meaningful alliances to support this work. We will identify the central role that theatre makers, in particular, hold in modeling this work.

10:30am-12:00pm – Concurrent Session (Roundtable) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher C

Dramaturgy and the Arts-Integrated Campus

Scott Horstein (Sonoma State University)

Panelists: Pierson Blaetz (Greenway Arts Alliance/Fairfax High School), Sabrina Klein (Cal Performances/UC Berkeley, @calperformances)

How do you dramaturg a school? How do you curate interdisciplinary bridges between performance and the classroom? This roundtable conversation will feature leaders who are re-envisioning how students of all levels engage with the arts on their campuses. Pierson Blaetz is co-Founder/co-Artistic Director of the Greenway Arts Alliance at Fairfax High School in Los Angeles, which combines numerous landmark programs to remake and dramaturg the campus. Sabrina Klein is Director of Artistic Literacy at Cal

Performances (UC Berkeley), a powerful campus presenter with one of the most diverse seasons and robust arts-based learning outreach programs in the country.

Dress Rehearsal of Branden Jacobs-Jenkins' An Octoroon @ Berkeley Rep

Join LMDA for Berkeley Rep's dress rehearsal of Branden Jacobs-Jenkins' An Octoroon, directed by Eric Ting.

Playwright and 2016 MacArthur Fellow Branden Jacobs-Jenkins won the Obie Award for his radical, incendiary, and subversively funny riff on Dion Boucicault's once-popular 1859 mustache-twirling melodrama. Judge Peyton is dead, and his plantation Terrebonne is on the brink of foreclosure. George, the high-minded heir apparent, falls for the lovely Zoe, who's one-eighth black. But the bigoted belle Dora has eyes for George, and the dastardly overseer M'Closky plots to keep Zoe and Terrebonne for himself. A spectacular collision of the antebellum South and 21st-century cultural politics, An Octoroon is "This decade's most eloquent theatrical statement on race in America today," says the New York Times.

We're sittin' here, talkin' about Access?! ***

Moderator: Brad Rothbart (@scrdchao)

Panelists: Michael Chemers, Melissa Hillman (@bittergertrude), Haritha Popuri (@habemus_popuri)

This panel will interrogate issues surrounding access and the theatre. While the issue of accessible spaces is one we will touch on, there are many other vectors of access we will attempt to unpack. For example, How do cultural differences / traditions trouble access? In what ways does gendered or raced spaces negotiate issues of access? What role does capitalism play in issues of access to theatre, whether that be as an audience member or horrifically under-compensated artist? Within our patriarchal culture, how does motherhood complicate access? If access is read as the ability to have a presence (physical, intellectual, or artistic) in the dominant culture, how do we measure success? Is it even a goal worth pursuing, or should we focus on building alternative structures that have inclusion as their fundament?

10:30am-12:00pm – Concurrent Session (Hot Topics Format) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Atrium

Playwrights Under the Radar ***

Conceived by Michael Evans

Presenters: Gavin Witt (Baltimore Center Stage, @CS_Dramaturgy), DD Kugler (Simon Fraser University), Ilana Brownstein (Company One, @bostonturgy), Geoff Proehl (University of Puget Sound), Art Borreca (Iowa Playwrights Workshop, @ArtBorreca), Lukas Brasherfons (University of Iowa, @PYorickCritic), Alison Ruth (The University of Iowa), Michael Evans, Sara Keats (Umbrella Project, @keatsara), Jess Hutchinson (@JessHutchinson), and Sally Ollove (The Bearded Ladies Cabaret, @KnowYourBeards)

Ever get the feeling that there are great playwrights out there who just haven't popped up on your radar? Using the popular Hot Topics format, eleven dramaturgs from around Canada and the U.S. will each present their favorite, not-yet-famous playwright – an author whose work they know and admire and who deserves a wider audience. Each pitch will last only five minutes, so fasten your seatbelt.

10:30am-12:00pm – Concurrent Session (Papers) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher A

The Work of Belonging: Affect and Anonymity in the Me Too Monologues

Kari Barclay (Stanford):

Scholars and artists seeking social impact have sometimes grappled with uncertainty of how to understand the role of an audience in socially engaged performance; how do we situate spectatorship (Rancière), affect/effect (Thompson), and participation (Bishop), among other dynamics? This paper will explore the role of audience in Me Too Monologues, a documentary theater project about identity and higher education that takes place at ten colleges and universities around the country. Each production gathers anonymous submissions on topics ranging from structural racism to sexual assault to mental health and then transfers these stories to actors to perform. Drawing from experience directing Me Too at Duke University and communicating with producers and directors of other productions, I will explore how anonymity creates two levels of witnessing in Me Too Monologues--the first on the part of the performer and the second on the part of the audience. To this end, I will employ Giorgio Agamben's concept of "impossibility of witnessing." With the writer having absented herself through anonymity, any testimony will be troubled by that absence. This absence, which haunts each monologue, leads audiences to imagine the writers in their midst. The impossibility of witnessing transfers a responsibility to the spectator--the imperative to action.

The Labors of the Dramaturg: Between the black box and the white cube

Eleanor Skimin (Brown University):

This paper considers the bourgeois history of the dramaturg by way of their Enlightenment legacy as a solitary intellectual, an habitué of the study and the sedentary labors of the office. How might attempts to reimagine the work (and image) of the dramaturg in post-Brechtian performance practices be characterized as a general project designed to lift this non-manual laborer up onto their feet and deliver them from a quiet, hidden room designed for feminized activities such as sitting, thinking and writing, to the studio and stage as masculinized spaces of moving, doing and speaking?

The Unspeakable Legacy of John Belluso

Michael Chemers (UC Santa Cruz):

American playwright John Belluso (1969-2006) experienced a meteoric stardom. In the astonishingly short five years between his emergence as a figure of national importance and his unexpected death, Belluso made a profound impact on the representation of the lives of disabled people in the theatre. In this paper I will extrapolate from Belluso's playwriting and its intersections with discourses of disability to outline a "dramaturgy of stigma" that understands theatre as a kind of "prosthesis," an intervention into the lives of real people that are, we find, hindered far more profoundly by silence than by any physical impairment.

10:30am-12:00pm – Concurrent Session (Roundtable) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher B

Ensemble-Based Dramaturgy: A Joint Session with the Network of Ensemble Theaters conference in Seattle

Moderators: Sally Ollove (The Bearded Ladies Cabaret, @KnowYourBeards) and Amrita Ramanan (Oregon Shakespeare Festival and NET Board Member)

Two great conferences merge for one roundtable session! Join this roundtable to ask questions and share experiences with ensemble-based dramaturgy. Topics include: the many different forms in which dramaturgy occurs in ensemble-based theater, the role of the dramaturg as ensemble member, the role of dramaturgy in ensemble-based creation. We will also touch on the intersection of the conference themes for each organization: Access, Activism & Art (LMDA) and Past/Forward (NET). A counterpart session will be held at the NET conference in Seattle and the two sessions will share their discoveries via the wonders of the internet.

10:30am-12:00pm – Concurrent Session (Workshop) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher C

The Sudbury Theatre Centre & Sensory-Friendly Performances

Facilitator: Haritha Popuri (@habemus_popuri)

The Sudbury Theatre Centre (STC) is the fourth theatre company in Canada to offer relaxed or sensory-friendly performances. STC's relaxed performances are open to everyone but are especially tailored to individuals who would find the normal conditions of a theatre (e.g., darkness, confined spaces, quiet spaces, fictional actions, sudden design effects, etc.) prohibitive. This may include, but is not limited to, individuals on the Autism Spectrum, those who have learning disabilities, or who have Dementia. Modifications are made both to the production and front-of-house procedures. In this informal roundtable, I propose both a critical discussion of the relaxed dramaturgy and the creation of a preliminary toolkit flexible enough for a variety of dramatic works. Some questions to consider: How do relaxed performances engage with both estrangement and empathetic devices? Do these modifications prompt us to view 9 dramatic effects like tension and surprise differently? Is the dramaturg particularly suited to this kind of work? Are there plays that could not possibly be "relaxed"?

Indigenous Art Activism: We don't cross your borders - your borders cross us ***

Moderator: David Geary (@gearsgeary)

In this plenary session, Indigenous award-winning playwright and dramaturg David Geary will lead a roundtable discussion with Indigenous artists/activists and dramaturgs. The discussion will showcase the work of artists/activists across North America as well as internationally. Indigenous dramaturgs will not only present their fellow artists' work, they will share how they as Indigenous dramaturgs can facilitate art-activism in their work and practice. This panel will consider the work of: Tame Iti, Te Hamua Shane Nikora, Adam Goodes, Dr. Elizabeth La Pensee, and Art Napoleon.

Friday, June 23rd

3:15pm-4:15pm – Concurrent Session (Roundtable) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Atrium

Collaboration and Communication a Cross-Border Conversation in Digital Space (SpiderWebShow & HowlRound) ***

Panelists: Laurel Green (Co-Editor of CdnTimes, SpiderWebShow, @LGYYC), Michael Wheeler (Artistic Director, SpiderWebShow, @SpiderWebShow) and Vijay Mathew (Cultural Strategist and co-founder of HowlRound) and Ramona Ostrowski (Associate Producer, HowlRound, @_Mona_Rose)

What is the nature of culture and performance in an increasingly digital society? How does it impact borders? What access do digital spaces provide? What does it mean to be National? Members of HowlRound and SpiderWebShow will appear physically and digitally in the same space via CdnStudio to consider these questions. Demonstrated at last year's LMDA conference as a tool seeded by a Bly Creative Capacity Grant, CdnStudio is an online 'room' that uses internet technology to bring collaborators together to see and hear each other in the same digital 'space'.

3:15pm-4:15pm – Concurrent Session (Panel) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher B

Dramaturgy on the Fringes

Moderator: Sally Ollove (Bearded Ladies Cabaret, @KnowYourBeards)

Panelists: Irene McCalphin/Magnolia Black (@MagnoliaBlack), Lauren Feldman, DeeDee Queen/Kaila Prins, and Sister Mary Media/Cass Brayton from the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence.

This conversation is a chance to explore the dramaturgy of fringe forms including cabaret, circus, burlesque, and drag. These forms are often dominated by queer and female-identified artists who are responding in real time to events happening in their communities. They create work that is sometimes overtly political and sometimes political just because of who is performing. Most radically of all, they eschew linear narrative to create a dramaturgy that centers on experience rather than story, collage rather than cohesion. This conversation will broach: What is the dramaturg's role in these various forms? What current trends of audience engagement are occurring? What are the commonalities of these forms? What can mainstream performing arts learn from the fringes and vice versa? Confirmed panelists include Irene McCalphin who performs burlesque in the Bay Area under the name Magnolia Black, Lauren Feldman, a playwright and circus dramaturg, and more to be announced!

3:15pm-4:15pm – Concurrent Session (Case Study) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher C

Producorial Dramaturgy: A Deep Dive Into Partnership & Mentorship

Presenter: Ilana Brownstein (@bostonturgy)

This past January, Company One Theatre produced Really by Jackie Sibblies Drury, inside, and in collaboration with, a local fine art gallery in a gentrifying area of Boston. Company One places dramaturgs at the center of our production processes, but even so, Really took this work in new, exciting directions. This case study will explore how the dramaturgy team on this project cultivated collaborative partnerships with several galleries; identified local photographers of color whose work was to be featured both within the set and in our audience engagement efforts; served as art director for the creation of photographs that played a central role within the text of the play; led an actor through the process of learning how to artfully and convincingly shoot a medium format film camera; mentored an early career dramaturg as an assistant and community connector; rooted our work in the questions that arose from placing the production in a contended neighborhood; and shepherded an incredibly complex play from the page to installation. The juggling act of being in the rehearsal room, attending to the minutiae of script interpretation, while also keeping a hand on the complex web of interconnected and necessary community relationships, required a particularly dramaturgical toolbox. The goal of sharing this case study is to provide others with a roadmap for impossible-seeming projects — the kind of projects that require a dramaturg’s ability to toggle between granularity and the 30,000 foot view. The case study is also an impassioned argument for what can be accomplished when dramaturgs are given decision-making — that is, producorial — power in a company.

4:30pm-6:00 pm -- Concurrent Activity (Workshop) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher C

Traveling to the Theatre and Back

Facilitator: Zee Hartmann (@zeehartmann)

Using practical parameters set by detailed dramaturgical research processes, LMDA conference members will do what they often do—walk to the theatre and back—and consider questions of The City (in this instance, Berkeley) as an emergent stage space and The Theatre as a social and physical force. With the conference as a platform for exchange, participants will have an opportunity for post-activity dialogue about the accessibility of art in the context of the everyday and how specific frameworks could transform the mundane into a political act.

Greenturgy Boot Camp

Facilitators: Amrita Ramanan & Alison Carey

Oregon Shakespeare Festival's Amrita Ramanan and Alison Carey invite you to explore Greenturgy, a dramaturgical response to the environmental crisis. Often dramaturgical conversations about the environment are compartmentalized to plays that are explicitly labeled as "environmental issue plays." With "Creating a Green Dramaturgy", we aim to explode this notion by unpacking the plays of contemporary writers and Shakespeare alike to explore how the environment is a constant, substantive thru line in our dramatic canon. In this session, we will acknowledge and develop best practices in this important work and find out what you need to make it part of your regular dramaturgical practice."

Long-Running Duos @ A.C.T & Shotgun ***

Moderator: Nakissa Etemad (Regional VP Metro Bay Area, Freelance Dramaturg)

Panelists: Carey Perloff (Artistic Director of A.C.T. - American Conservatory Theater, @CEPinSF), Michael Paller (Dramaturg and Director of Humanities, A.C.T.), Patrick Dooley (Founding Artistic Director of Shotgun Players, @ShotgunDooley), Joanie McBrien (Dramaturg & Development Director, Shotgun Players)

Nakissa Etemad will guide a conversation between two artistic leaders, Carey Perloff of A.C.T. and Patrick Dooley of Shotgun Players, and their long-time resident dramaturgs Michael Paller and Joanie McBrien. Get acquainted with the work of these two theater companies as we explore why they employ staff dramaturgs, details of their positions, and how these vital dramaturg-artistic director relationships work and grow throughout the seasons. How has dramaturgy and dramaturgical thinking influenced each theater company, both logistically and artistically? How have these artists supported each other's work over the years? Learn more about these inspiring collaborations.

I Dream of Dramaturgy: Access and Inclusion in Dramaturgy Education

Moderator: Patrick Denney (@patrickdenney42)

Panelists: Michael Chemers, Marrok Sedgwick (@speakingautie), Adrian Centeno, Brad Rothbart (@scrdchao)

In Ghost Light: An Introductory Handbook to Dramaturgy, Michael Chemers jokingly points out how few, if any, children in America close their eyes at night and dream of becoming dramaturgs. As the role of the dramaturg continues to develop and expand, this question deserves some serious thought: What are the different points of access (physical, socio-economic, cultural, etc.) to dramaturgy education and how do we expand them? This panel will explore both the panelists' personal histories with dramaturgical training/education, as well as brainstorm tools and models for implementing dramaturgy education curriculums across the country.

9:50am-11:00am – Concurrent Session (Panel) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher B

Diverse Casting

Moderator: Philippa Kelly (Resident Dramaturg, California Shakespeare Theater, @philippatheater)

Panelists: Amrita Ramanan (Oregon Shakespeare Festival) and Martine Kei Green-Rogers (SUNY:New Paltz, President-Elect, LMDA, @martinekei)

How do different teams of collaborators identify, negotiate & resolve complex issues that can evolve from inclusive casting in traditionally all-white plays? How do we shape conversations so as to break open stereotypes and not reiterate them? What are some of the "unspoken rules" of casting that are being re-framed? Panel members will use their own case studies/experiences to illuminate diversity in respect of race, gender, disability and ageism.

Dramaturgy and Contemplative Practice Sharing Jam Session

Session Leader: Mei Ann Teo (Hampshire College, @Teo1Mei)

This is a session for dramaturgs who work and teach via contemplative practice, and those interested in integrating it into their work. In facing our complex humanity and the tumultuous present, contemplative practice serves as an ideal framework for developing the intersection of artistic/civic/spiritual practice as dramaturgs. We will gather practitioners and educators who work with contemplation, including meditation, yoga, and paths through personal and communal history to share experiences, learn new methods, and develop more understanding of our craft via this foundation.

The Opportunities and Challenges of Responsive Theatre ***

Moderator: Ilana Brownstein (Company One, @bostonturgy)

Panelists: - Alison Carey, Diane Brewer, Catherine Maria Rodriguez, Phaedra Michelle Scott

This roundtable discussion will explore how and why responsive theatre gets made (examples of this genre: Every 28 Hours Project, Orlando Project, Ghostlight Project, etc); what challenges are posed by the emergence of this form of immediate "social emergency" style work; what best practices look like; and how to amplify and innovate (rather than duplicate) the great work being done in this field. Together, we will try to begin to codify a list of discoveries and revelations that the field can draw from in the coming months and years — surely, we are more in need of effective, immediate responsive theatre actions now than ever before. Audience responses to these prompts will be welcomed.

Activity:

Creating a Green Dramaturgy: Here We Go (Workshop in Osher B&C)

Facilitators: Amrita Ramanan & Alison Carey

Oregon Shakespeare Festival's Amrita Ramanan and Alison Carey invite you to learn about and continue to create Greenturgy, a dramaturgical response to the environmental crisis. Often dramaturgical conversations about the environment are compartmentalized to plays that are explicitly labeled as "environmental issue plays." With Greenturgy in Action, we aim to explode this notion by unpacking the plays of Shakespeare and contemporary writers alike to explore how the environment is a constant, substantive thru line in our dramatic canon. In this session, Ramanan, Carey and other participants will reflect on what they've learned so far about best practices in this important work and find out what you need to make it part of your regular dramaturgical practice.

1:45pm-2:45pm -- Concurrent Session (Roundtable) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Atrium

Dramaturgy Outside of the Theatre

Moderator: Kate Langsdorf (museum programs specialist, @hipster_mother)

Panelists: James Waugh (Vice President of Development at Lucasfilm Story Group, @Waughtang), Martha Steketee, (Theatre Critic & Researcher, @msteketee), Erika Schmidt (Pixar)

Continuing conversations with L.A.-based LMDA members, we will discuss the vitality of dramaturgy in other fields such as Film/TV, Themed Entertainment & Theme Parks, Museums, and wherever else there's a story and an audience. This session will showcase LMDA members in other industries, help theatre dramaturgy map out their potential careers, and demonstrate the value of dramaturgical practice in multiple fields.

1:45pm-2:45pm -- Concurrent Session (Performance/Workshop) -- ERC, Osher A

Transmissions: Bodies/Echoes/Ash

Performance by mia susan amir

Facilitators: mia susan amir & Davey Samuel Calderon

This performance and workshop will include a presentation of mia susan amir's interdisciplinary, audience-immersive performative ritual, Transmissions: Bodies/Echoes/Ash. This work is an exploration of the condition of Dybbuk Consciousness: the ways in which trauma resulting from sociopolitical events is manifest intergenerationally in the spaces of the home and the body; the narrative hauntings that emerge somatically, politically, psychically, spiritually, and culturally when our stories go untold.

Amir and Calderon will lead a practice-based workshop following the performance exploring the ways in which artists creating responses to state and gender-based violence often work from the sites of fragmentation and silence. We will explore how hybrid form allows fragmented stories to cohere through aesthetic and narrative echoes; and the ways in which improvisation, embodiment, and interaction in the performative act can generate narrative porousness, democratizing narrative production, to generate empathy, connectivity, reciprocity, and responsibility across difference.

1:45pm-2:45pm -- Concurrent Session -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher B

Immersive Storytelling - Dramaturgy & Emerging Technologies

Panelists: Sadah Espii Proctor (@ladyespii), Jennifer Duong (digital - Skype)

Virtual and augmented reality are emerging as new mediums of the 21st century. They take immersion and interactivity to new heights, either through full immersion in the digital realm (virtual reality) or imposing the digital realm onto the physical realm (augmented reality). But with many prototypes, demos, and critiques describing "a lack of engaging content", how can we look to dramaturgy to find models for immersive storytelling in the 21st century? In this talk, dramaturg Sadah Espii Proctor and director Jennifer Duong will speak about their experiences in storytelling through this new medium. They will also connect via social media to the larger VR development community to foster connections between dramaturgs with technologists.

1:45pm-2:45pm -- Concurrent Session (Roundtable) -- Ed Roberts Campus, Osher C

Intercultural Play Creation with Roadside and Pregones Theaters

Participants: Amy Brooks (Program Director & Dramaturg, Roadside Theater, @bourbonswan), Rosalba Rolón (Founder and Artistic Director, Pregones Theater, @rosalbarolon), Arnaldo J. López (Development Manager, Pregones Theater, @ajlopezbx), and Roberto Bedoya (Cultural Affairs Manager for the City of Oakland)

A collaboration between rural and urban theaters – Roadside (@RoadsideTheater), rooted in the coalfields of Appalachia, and the Bronx-based Pregones (@pregonesprtt) – "BETSY! The Appalachian-Puerto Rican Musical" draws on both ensembles' 13-year iterative development process through workshops in Kentucky, Nashville, and New York City. This panel, featuring Roadside and Pregones ensemble, will trace "BETSY!"'s rich, turbulent development and reveal new strategies for rural-urban creative exchange, asking: How can intercultural play creation create an activist space for community cultural development which intentionally breaches lines of race, class, gender & age?

Representation, Inclusion and Activism: Concrete ideas for building a more representative and inclusive theater ***

Moderator: Martine Kei Green-Rogers (@martinekei) and Maren Robinson

Panelists: Catherine María Rodríguez (@latinadramaturg), Megan Monaghan Rivas (@MeeeganReeevas), Ben Randle (@BRandleTheatre), Torange Yeghiazarian

This session is focused on ways theater companies, individuals and universities can take action to bring diverse voices into all levels of an organization, both on stage and off. The focus is not on challenges but about specific ways to take action and make change. Panelists will each talk about concrete things an individual or organization can do to start making changes. The group will open up for discussion and in the last 15 minutes we will divide up into action groups where the attendees will work in small groups on strategies and action items to come out of the conference for either their home organizations or LMDA.
