TAMANAWAS
Fall 2016

Published by The Associated Students of Puget Sound
If you can keep your head when all about you
   Are losing theirs and blaming it on you,
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
   But make allowance for their doubting too;
If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
   Or being lied about, don’t deal in lies,
Or being hated, don’t give way to hating,
   And yet don’t look too good, nor talk too wise:

If you can dream—and not make dreams your master;
If you can think—and not make thoughts your aim;
If you can meet with Triumph and Disaster
   And treat those two impostors just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you’ve spoken
   Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the things you gave your life to, broken,
   And stoop and build ’em up with worn-out tools:

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
   And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings
   And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
   To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you
   Except the Will which says to them: ‘Hold on!’

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with Kings—nor lose the common touch,
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,
   If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
   With sixty seconds’ worth of distance run,
Yours is the Earth and everything that’s in it,
   And—which is more—you’ll be a Man, my son!
Tamanawas is University of Puget Sound’s yearbook, publishing its 93rd volume in its 92nd year. The staff this fall has six members, from first years to 2017 graduates. Bec Sather Jenkins, the Editor-in-Chief, is in her third year on staff, and is grateful to help to be a time keeper of the Puget Sound community. The future of Tamanawas will see some change and the transition to a biannual magazine aimed at sharing the stories of campus members.

How long have you been a member of the Tamanawas Staff?

Tami Hoang: This is my fourth year. I started as a freshman and am now a senior.

What’s been your favorite part of working on staff?

Annie Vela: I love that I get to contribute to something that will last long after we’re gone.

Why is Tamanawas important to you?

Bec Sather Jenkins: Yearbook is a fantastic way to create a lasting legacy on campus, and it’s also a great way to learn about everything that’s happening at Puget Sound.

Lighthouse is an all-inclusive Christian community. Bri Morrison, Lighthouse President, says: it is a “living, breathing, vibrant community and family where students are able to talk about whatever matters most to them. Students are given an opportunity to worship with others who, like them, are going through the same crazy rollercoaster of college life. Despite being of similar age and education, those who attend Lighthouse come from a wide range of backgrounds, theological perspectives, and political leanings. But rather than let our differences divide us, we embrace diversity, knowing that growth comes in learning from one another.” Lighthouse goes on retreats, hosts events for all of campus, service activities and allows students a place to worship however they want on Tuesday nights. It has been on campus for 28 years, and has shaped countless student’s lives and faith journeys. Bri explains, “Lighthouse has helped me grow so much as a person and shown me what it really means to take my faith into my own hands.”
Peer Allies is a support network of students that hold weekly "office hours" to provide an opportunity for survivors of sexual violence or harassment who may have felt powerless to talk, be heard, and be believed. They also provide information to survivors in a safe space about other resources both on and off campus. Each person has their own reasons for wanting to be involved, and it is an incredibly personal driven choice, but these students take time out of their days to provide a safe space for anyone who needs it, and this campus would not be as whole as it is, without it.
ASUPS Campus Films is a group of students dedicated to offering relatable movies to the community of Puget Sound for the low price of $1. With a new film schedule each semester, the club has been bringing in large crowds with popular films like Finding Dory and the new Ghostbusters reboot. Films are shown every weekend Friday through Sunday with two showings a day in Rausch Auditorium. The fall schedule follows a string of films that are both relevant to culture and to what’s going on when the film is being shown.

The Fall 2016 lineup included films such as Finding Dory, Swiss Army Man, Scream, Hell Or High Water, Trick R’ Treat and Kubo and the Two Strings and Captain Fantastic.
Every semester, the Puget Sound Musical Theatre community, Curtain Call, puts on a show that consists of a series of performances having to do with one overarching theme. The Fall 2016 Show was called ‘Showtime!’ where all of the performances have to do with the same theme of time. The musical numbers come from a variety of different musicals, such as Merrily We Roll Along, Dogfight, Songs from a New World, Next to Normal, Heathers, A Gentleman’s Guide, Hello Dolly!, The Last Five Years, Avenue Q, On the Town, and Newsies. The club is co-run by seniors Michael Stahl and Patrick Zimmerman. The most important thing about Curtain Call is that anyone is able to join in the fun. All of the numbers are directed by students, and the large group number that is the finale of the performance is usually directed by a member of the Puget Sound Faculty. This fall’s group number, a mash-up of the Merrily We Roll Along and Newsies songs “Our Time” and “Seize the Day” is directed by Dawn Padula, Director of Vocal Studies and Associate Professor of Voice.
Writer's Guild is the club on campus that is dedicated to the art of writing. This can mean anything from poetry to fiction to creative non-fiction. The club is in its third year, and club President Rebekah Sherman loves that she's about to work so closely with many of the writers of UPS. Rebekah says that oftentimes, she "...writes better than she speaks and writing helps me get my thoughts down more concretely." The club this year consists of Rebekah, a junior, and three other members. The group may be small, but they get a lot done within the span of an hour.

This November marks the beginning of National Novel Writing Month (NaNoWriMo) 2016, and a few of the members look forward to having the space to work on their novels for a full hour with no distractions. The NaNoWriMo theme this year is "Imagination and Beyond." The organization is a non-profit that works to help writers with their novels and to inspire people to work every day on a 50,000 word novel in one month. Writer's Guild is supportive of any work that wants to be done in the space, and Rebekah hopes to continue to facilitate that.
The National Association on Mental Illness (NAMI) is an organization dedicated to the education on mental illness and the upkeep of mental health. University of Puget Sound has one of our own chapters working with CHWS to make sure students have a safe, stable place where they can share experiences with mental illness or their own, understanding how to support those with mental illness, and offering educational resources to the students of UPS about mental illness and upkeep. In October, NAMI hosted a two-day conversation on mental health education. They offer these “Real Talks” throughout the semester to better educate the UPS community on mental health and illness. NAMI is a reminder to the students of UPS that there are better ways to take care of yourself (especially during midterms and exams!) and they’re always available to the community.
The Black Student Union at Puget Sound was established in 1968 by three students, and the original BSU had nine active members. Today, the BSU has more than 40 active members and allies, including students, faculty and staff.

It remains one of the oldest campus clubs, and has been responsible for implementing and demanding many changes for the betterment of all students of color. Its mission, explains President Shannon Woods, is “to help black students strive for academic excellence, promote positive images of African Americans and help students become an essential part of a college community.”

This year, the BSU hosted their annual One More fundraising scholarship dinner, and Kwanzaa. Additionally, the BSU created the Black Ice literary magazine, which began in 2012.
ECO Club, or Environmental Campus Outreach Club, is a UPS club that works to put into action sustainable directives on the campus. They’re also active in a lot of environmental activities in the parts of the Pacific Northwest outside of Puget Sound.

A large focus of ECO Club is helping UPS create an environment that we want to live in. The Divest UPS campaign that has popped up around campus comes from ECO Club, and is all about pulling our investments out of anything supporting fossil fuels. This is a branch of the work done by the national Divestment Student Network.

This year, ECO Club is also responsible for hosting the Cascade Climate Network Convergence, which provides the opportunity for students all over the Pacific Northwest to converge as well as learn more about things like “environmental justice, sustainability, climate change, and environmental racism,” says ECO Club President, Curtis Mraz.
Phi Eta Sigma (PES) is a national honors organization that works to help others. Here at Puget Sound, their service has involved a project involving gathering school supplies, a PES General Meeting where they played Pictionary and ate ice cream, writing letters to veterans, and the Adopt-A-Spot program, where members keep the streets surrounding campus clean by picking up trash. Helen Tscurr explains that "this year Phi Eta Sigma has continued to support local and national charitable organizations including Tony's kitchen and Adopt-A-Spot. We organized a letter drive for active and retired military personnel, and have focused, by request of the members, on the presidential election by organizing a fantastic and interactive election viewing party! We have brought speakers in to discuss resume building, grad-school applications, and investment. PES has been a great opportunity for me to gain perspective on leadership and feel more connected to the campus community!"
The Women’s Rugby team at University of Puget Sound, the Ruggers, are a group of ladies dedicated to the sport of Rugby. This fall, the group brought in a slew of new recruits, as well as the Tacoma Sirens Women’s Rugby Football Club to teach the new recruits the basics of the game. Much of the game is rooted in positions, movement, and passing. The game has often been referred to as “organized chaos.” The basics: the ball may only be passed sideways or backwards; the ball may be carried forward or kicked; points are scored when the ball touches down in the try zone or is kicked through one of the goal posts; the game is played in two, forty-minute halves. Fun fact: the numbers on the jerseys of players mean the position of the player, unlike many sports.
FENCING

Fencing is a club on campus that allows a space for students to practice the sport. Eliot Childress, the President of the Fencing Club, says: "it not only lets us play with swords and creates excitement of facing someone in a duel, but it's mental and strategical challenge too."

The amount of training that the club goes through in order to become a successful fencing squad lasts hours. Henry, a fencer at the beginning of his freshman year until now, says "it was something I had always kind of wanted to do, but I'd never really had the opportunity. To be honest, I was a little apprehensive. I just wasn't sure if getting stabbed repeatedly with swords was as fun as it sounded. I discovered very quickly that fencing presented interesting psychological, physical and strategic challenges which I thoroughly enjoyed. Fencing is now one of my favorite ways to exercise, and I would highly recommend sanctioned stabbing to anyone even slightly interested.

Their motto is perfectly catchy: "Hack Chop, Stab Slash" which draws upon key fencing terms. Lastly, Aidan, a regular at Fencing club says "fencing is a way to improve my body and mind in a way that builds strong friendships and is fun. Fencing requires not only strength, but also coordination and a sense of presence that translates to how I carry myself in every day life. In addition to the physical benefits, fencing allows me to attempt to outsmart my opponent, which keeps my brain active. Fencing is an important part of my week at Puget Sound." Most members agree that their time at Puget Sound would not be the same without Fencing. It is wonderful that our school has the ability to endorse all different types of sports, and clearly, fencing has a great future ahead.
Spotlight: Teague Wallace

What are you particularly excited about this year?

I am excited about all the new faces. Being a club sport, recruiting is always an important aspect of the team. We had a lot of guys leave last year and didn't know exactly how that would affect our play. However, we got a strong group of recruits who will see plenty of playing time. I am looking forward to seeing the young guys grow as ruggers and men.

How has playing shaped your college experience?

I originally joined rugby because I wanted to stay in shape and keep a competitive edge. Starting a new sport as a freshman, I was not exactly sure how I would fit in, but it was one of the best decisions I made during my four years here. There is something about taking the pitch [field] with 14 other guys and know you are in a battle together. By joining rugby, I know I have 30 guys I can depend on having my back with anything.

If you could play for any professional team, who would it be?

It would be nice to represent my nation and play for the USA Eagles, but ultimately I would love to play for the New Zealand All Blacks. They have been the most dominant team in the league and it would be awesome to be a part of a team with such a strong tradition in the game.
The University of Puget Sound Sailing Team was founded in 2006, when a group of energetic students decided to bring one of the greatest sports to our wonderful university. After several short stints and breaks, the team took on full form in the fall of 2008 and has continued to build momentum ever since. Starting with just four to six sailors, the team has now evolved into a group of fifteen committed yachtsmen and women who compete throughout the Pacific Northwest and Southwestern Canada. The team participates in two regattas yearly: the first hosted by the University of Oregon in late October, and the second in Seattle in early November.
Spoken word and poetry offers a unique and powerful way to translate intense and complex aspects of the human condition into incredibly effective pieces of art. This semester, SWAP club aimed to offer a creative community where people from all different backgrounds can come together and create poetry. They had two open mic nights in the Oppenheimer Cafe where you just sign up casually at the door.

Aedin Wright states, “I find delivering a piece of spoken word to a room full of strangers to be the most effective way to work through the queries of my own human experience, and am deeply moved by watching other people perform and do the same.”
SIRGE

The organization that gets the campus community talking about and interacting with issues of sexual violence.

Sexuality Issues, Relationships, and Gender Education (SIRGE), is a new campus initiative, with the ambition to get the campus community talking about and interacting with issues of sexual violence. This year, a focus has been put on programming, since this is where discussions are facilitated. Coordinator Alex Keysselitz ('18) explains that “this year is really about getting the campus and students aware of what SIRGE is and getting everyone more involved in these discussions.”

This Fall, SIRGE coordinated Take Back the Night, an event held each year developed to “empower those who have felt powerless.” TBTN includes a march around campus and a speak-out geared to support victims of sexual violence and make all participants know what it is to feel safe and powerful. Additionally, SIRGE sponsored the It’s On Us Week of Action in October, and welcomed the YWCA to host the Domestic Violence Monologues.
Keysselitz explains that “sexual violence doesn’t discriminate, it affects everyone... that is why it is so important to me.” The root of the violence, she says, is power and control. “To me it is so important to understand that power and control piece. It doesn’t matter what race, gender, socioeconomic class you are. This is a universal problem. And as someone who has been personally effected by this violence I feel like it is my mission as a college student to do as much as possible to make sure that this doesn’t happen to anyone else.”

If you are interested in SIRGE programming or wish to know more, visit www.pugetsound.edu/sirge or contact sirge@pugetsound.edu. Sexual Assault Victim Advocates as well as avenues for reporting can be found at http://www.pugetsound.edu/sexual-misconduct-resource-center/.
UBIQUITOUS THEY

Ubiquitous They (UT) is the name of the comedy troupe on campus. It has two different sections, Improv and Sketch. Jacquie Harro is the leader of improv, along with Molly Gregory. Alana Fine­man and Elizabeth (Allie) Lawrence are the leaders of sketch. Their current members for improv are: Liam Schaaf, Michelle Bank, Nalin Richardson, Emma Kelly, Hanna Brumley, Emily Martis, David Raftrey, Molly McClean, Molly Gregory, Jacquie Harro, Adam Chong, Allie Lawrence and John Giltner.

Molly Gregory says that: UT strives to create a supportive, team-driven environment. This year, they’re focussing on building trust within our team as well as finding new ways to engage in the improv community. They are learning several new forms, watching improv performances, and participating in off campus events and competitions. To Molly and Jacquie, the improv leaders, improv means “creating a collaborative environment wherein they can create unique art that exists only in the moment. It also allows them to explore using their imaginations, and to live in worlds that are not our own.”

Alana, a leader of sketch, says: “When I first stumbled upon UT my sophomore year, I was struggling with anxiety and was having a hard time connecting with other people and finding a place I belonged. Not only did the group give me my first home on campus, but it gave me one of the best ways to cope with my anxiety: comedy. Working with such talented comedians to write, direct, and act in our own sketch show every semester is so rewarding every time, and I always walk out feeling great about myself. I love to laugh and to make other people laugh, and UT allows me to literally set aside time every week to devote myself to just that.”

I know UPS would not be the same without this fantastic comedic group, and their amazingly funny reputation will be remembered always.
“Relay For Life has been an important event for me since 2005. I participate in Relay For Life because my family has been affected by cancer several times. My grandmother, grandfather, grandma, and mother have all fought cancer, and I lost my grandmother to breast cancer in 2000. I participate in Relay as my way of fighting back against cancer. I want to help find the cure for cancer so that I am never told and my children never have to hear that I have cancer or that anyone else they love has cancer. I want to make cancer a thing of the past. I have also enjoyed being part of the process of making a Relay happen. Leading the planning committee last year was a lot of work but also very fun, and I am looking forward to another great year!”

ODYSSEY: 5 THINGS THAT HAPPEN YOUR FIRST WEEK BACK AT PUGET SOUND

The UPS Odyssey was established in early 2016, to read more visit theodysseyonline.com/@university-of-puget-sound.
Article by Mallory Allen.

Coming back to school after a summer away is always exciting, but I guarantee it's not as interesting as UPS. Here are some occurrences that are only available when returning to our beloved liberal arts college, The Puge.

1. Seeing the two-ish people from your friend group that aren't from the Bay Area
Odds are if you attend Puget Sound, you're probably from the Bay Area along with a majority of your cherished squad. There's nothing better than seeing your friends from the East Coast, Mid-West, and Colorado. Because, let's face it, your 'baes' from the Bay Area are great, but you saw them multiple times this summer eating Dim Sum in San Fran.

2. Realizing that Cellar pizza is not as good as you remembered it
After being home and eating at all your favorite restaurants, it's hard to go back to the SUB knowing just exactly how the scrambled eggs taste (are they really eggs? who knows). You'll likely flee to the cellar and be disappointed by the sub-par pizza and the 50 cent ranch cups that are impossible to dip in. But hey, at least you're not eating upstairs right?

3. Trying to fit all of your stuff from last year's dorm into this year's residence, or trying to fill the empty space on your wall.
What people don't tell you about college dorm rooms is that they change every year. Not only will you have to buy an overpriced storage unit over the summer, but your room will either be significantly smaller or larger than it was when you lived in the freshman dorms. Good luck making it work Loggers. 'Hack' those old decorations and 'Chop' everyone's expectations in half.

4. Reliving the dreaded grass shortcut
You're probably going to be late to class when you first arrive for your courses at the Puge, and because the weather is so nice you'll think, "Hey, I can just take a shortcut through one of Puget Sound's lovely green lawns". I hate to break it to you, but the sprinklers make the grass just as muddy as it is in the rainy season. Half of our tuition goes to the lawn, your should have seen this coming.

5. Recognizing that Puget Sound is the place for you
There's a reason you picked this school in the first place and despite it's quirks, you love it all the same. Buckle up for another ride on the Puget Sound roller-coaster and hold on tight. Welcome back to Ta-HOME-a! (SUB eggs and all!)
SPOON UNIVERSITY: HOMEMADE SOFT PRETZELS

Spoon University established a Puget Sound chapter in 2016, and has been sharing food and lifestyle articles ever since. For more information, visit pugetsound.spoonuniversity.com.
Recipe by Annie Vela.

Soft pretzels are definitely a crowd pleaser, and are certainly one of those things that when you get them right, those who eat them are always impressed. Trust me, the “wow, you actually made these!” and “teach me teach me!” cheers will come. They are definitely worth the wait and the effort.

Prep Time: 1 hour 30 minutes
Cook Time: 15 minutes
Total Time: 1 hour and 45 minutes
Servings: 9

1. Mix flour and salt together in one bowl, then add warm milk, warm water, and sugar together in another.
2. Add yeast into warm milk/water/sugar mixture and stir slightly, wait until it becomes frothy.
3. Pour yeast mixture into flour and salt, and mix together until a sticky dough forms.
4. Pour the sticky dough onto a floured surface and knead. Add flour if you need to stop it from sticking.
5. Form the dough into a ball once it is smooth and not sticky.
6. Place it in a lightly oiled bowl in warm place, covered in a damp towel until it doubles in size. This takes about an hour.
7. Punch that dough. Just once, but yes, punch it.
8. Cut the dough into 9 even pieces, and then roll them into a log on a lightly floured surface.
9. Twist them into their signature pretzel shape (or not, whatever shape you like) and place them on a baking sheet covered in parchment paper. Let rest for 15 minutes.
10. Add baking soda to boiling water, then carefully boil those puffy pretzel babes for about 1 minute, then put them back on their baking sheet home. While they’re hot, brush butter and sprinkle salt on them. Try not to let any water back on that baking sheet or else when the pretzels bake they will be weirdly gooey.
11. Bake them in a preheated oven at 500°F for 10 minutes.
12. Remove when golden brown, let them cool for 5 minutes. It’s hard to wait, so brush them with a little more butter and a little extra salt if you like ’em salty.
13. Gobble them up before they’re gone.
The 2016-2017 Associated Students of the University of Puget Sound brings an era of inclusivity and diversity along with a new staff of Executive Leaders. This year’s executive team wants people to feel connected with ASUPS. The overall goal is to make ASUPS feel like an accessible resource to all students on campus. This year, ASUPS is hoping that other students to feel like they have peers on their side to help answer questions or concerns they may have with the university, or to help implement their project ideas on campus. In order to make sure students are heard, the team is putting forth the idea of better communication between ASUPS and the UPS community. This year’s main goal is to make sure the campus is trying its hardest to be 100% inclusive. Tony Calabrese-Thomas, Director of Marketing and Outreach says, “I really hope people see that our executive team was excited by the challenge of searching for ways that ASUPS could improve on its fronts of equity, accessibility, community, justice, and inclusion as an institution. I hope that our work lays a groundwork for future programming and shows both students and our administrative bodies that anti-oppressive and actively inclusive work is worth the challenge of breaking away from what we have always done. I hope that we only help in furthering a campus climate of love and inclusion at Puget Sound.” The future of ASUPS is strong and ready for anything the University throws at them.
The ASUPS Executive team is comprised of six major roles: President, Vice President, Director of Marketing and Outreach, Director of Business Services, Director of Technology Services, and Director of Student Interests. This year’s staff: Noah Lum-bantobing, Lydia Bauer, Tony Calabrese-Thomas, Lauren Griffin, Andrew McPherran, and Peyton Anstine. The picture above is the Executive Team in their recent game of baseball with Dean Mike Segawa.
PHI DELTA THETA

Spotlight: President Andrew Dunn

I joined for... The brotherhood. Phi Delts are everywhere on campus whether that be in sports, ASUPS, IFC, Peer Allies, etc. This brotherhood is everywhere. I know if I walk into any room with a Phi Delt I know they have my back.

Being President is... stressful and rewarding. You know everything that is going on with the house, in and out. As president, you make real life choices that affect 100 people., but the beauty of the position is being able to leave behind a legacy that will be remembered as long as the fraternity stands.

My favorite Phi Delt memory is... bid night. When you join this brotherhood, the boys welcome you with open arms and lift you up over the crowd ram-paging with excitement. This brotherhood is an experience unlike any other.

BETA THETA PI

Beta devotes energy to developing men of principle, for a principled life. Their philanthropic involvement largely focuses on the Beta Theta Pi foundation, a national organization that promotes the educational mission and goals of the fraternity. However, that is not where involvement ends. Members have volunteered at the Puget Sound Creek Restoration Society, fundraised for Rebuilding Hope Sexual Assault Center in Pierce county, and participated in Walk a Mile in Her Shoes. To members, an integral part of Beta life is taking intentional time to build brotherhoods, foster close relationships and maintain the standards of a Beta man.
SIGMA ALPHA EPSILON

Known as SAE on campus, Sigma Alpha Epsilon prides itself on being a fraternity where bonds and friendships are formed, and boys become men. Their philanthropic partner is Children’s Miracle Network Hospitals, but in the Tacoma community they do many projects with restoration, tree replanting, and the Walk A Mile In Her Shoes campaign. SAE members are heavily involved on campus, from being orientation leaders, to leadership roles within many different clubs on campus, members are hardworking individuals, leaving their mark on the UPS campus, and the Tacoma community.

SIGMA CHI

The Puget Sound chapter of Sigma Chi is focused this year on developing new programming and strengthening the brotherhood within the chapter. This Fall, a significant portion of time will be spent on fundraising for the St. Baldrick’s Foundation for Childhood Cancer Research. In November, the chapter hosted their annual event which involved members shaving their head in front of the campus community. President Matty Specht, asked about his experience with Sigma Chi, explains that he is thankful for “the support that [his] brothers have provided,” adding that they continue to push him towards his goals. He adds that he is “exceptionally proud” of the chapter’s philanthropic, academic and personal growth. “At the end of the day,” he says, “I know Sigma Chi will be there to push me to be the best I can during and after my time at UPS.”
GAMMA PHI BETA

For President Rachel Gillespie, Gamma Phi Beta has served as a tremendous opportunity for growth. She explains that “being surrounded by a ton of brilliant, motivated, and confident women has improved my life tremendously.” This semester, the house has put their efforts into philanthropic work to support Girls on the Run, a foundation aimed at empowering young women and girls. In October, the house hosted a Dance-a-Thon to raise funds for the organization.

Gillespie adds that the women of Gamma Phi Beta “have shown [her] that it’s not only okay to stand up and say what you believe in, but that you have an obligation to yourself to do so.”

ALPHA PHI

Alpha Phi works closely with the Alpha Phi Foundation, which funds investments and research for women’s cardiac care. They host several philanthropic events like the Red Dress Gala and Alpha Phifa throughout the year on campus to raise money for the Alpha Phi Foundation. Alpha Phi prides itself on being a sisterhood of outstanding women who support one another in lifelong achievement. The members of Alpha Phi are excited to be constantly finding lifelong friendships, and being able to take such positive care of themselves and those around them. Their sisterhood is a strong presence in their hearts, and on our campus.
This year, Pi Beta Phi took the Greek Week trophy home as champions, showing how powerful their sisterhood is. As one of their key values, sisterhood really shone through in their victory. They are a very enthusiastic group revolved around friendship.

In addition to their victory, Pi Phi decided to increase their service hour goals as a way to show their commitment to philanthropy.

Mikayla Hougan explains, “Pi Phi has defined my college experience completely. I love being a member of an organization full of such strong and incredible women—as cheesy as it sounds, my sisters inspire me every day”.

Kappa Alpha Theta nationally and within the Delta Iota chapter, strive to embody their motto: Leading Women! This semester Theta members continued to support each other with events to highlight scholastic achievement, self-care and empowering women. They chapter was ecstatic to welcome 6 new members into Theta through informal recruitment All of campus was invited to Theta’s fall singature philanthropy, Rock the CASA, a benefit concert featuring local and UPS-alumn popular music artists. Theta sisters continue to spread support and encouragement around their community.
MEN’S CREW

The Charlie Brown Regatta was the only competition in the fall for the Loggers, as the American Lake Fall Classic was cancelled due to weather. However, the men showed strong placing first in the eight man and four man races at the Charlie Brown Regatta. The Loggers look to build off last year’s success as the Spring season approaches. Last Spring, the Logger four took home the bronze in the WIRA and the crew team earned the Cascade Cup title. With six scheduled meets in the Spring, the Loggers will undoubtedly continue their streak of excellence.

WOMEN’S CREW

The women’s crew team is poised for an exciting Spring, with their one Fall meet, the Charlie Brown Regata, ending in a victory for the varsity eight. Beyond performance on the water, the Loggers find success in the classroom. Last year, seven student athletes were named CRCA Scholar-Athletes, a testament to the multifaceted nature of the team. This year, the Loggers are ready for another fruitful season with pre-season polls predicting them to finish third in the NWC. Six scheduled meets in the Spring will give the Loggers an opportunity to meet, or exceed, this prediction.
FOOTBALL

“We have been getting better and better every year and are ready to keep moving forward.”

Spotlight: Hans Fortune

My favorite moment of the season so far has been... beating Occidental. The past two years we had really close games. We lost by 2 in my first start here two years ago and lost by 5 last year at home. Occidental has always played us tough and did again this year when we won 49-42. It was also pretty cool that I set record for total yards in a game and our offense set record for most offensive yards in a game.

I’m excited for... everything this year, especially conference games to start. The attitude has changed a lot since I first showed up here my Freshman year following two winless seasons, it is very positive and we completely believe in ourselves to compete with every team we face. We have been getting better and better every year and are ready to keep moving forward and build off of last year’s success.

Playing football in college has... been the most important thing I have done for my college experience. It has provided me a great group of friends and also challenged me in school by stressing time management and the balance between school and football. It is also what brought me into Greek life here where I would say joining Phi Delt is the second best thing I did. Football has also helped me develop many skills like a good work ethic and how to handle tough situations under pressure.

If I could play for any professional team it would be... the Seahawks. I grew up in Washington and have been a Hawks fan for as long as I can remember.
MEN’S SOCCER

Spotlight: Senior Josh Sonico

My favorite moment of this season has been... going down to northern California. Each win was unique and satisfying. It was also great getting some California rays before the PNW gloom. I’m excited that... I get to play another day with this great group of guys.

Playing soccer in college has... created challenges in terms of time management but also taught me life lessons I wouldn’t get from getting an education alone.

If I could play for any professional team it would be... Real Madrid. Being able to learn/play with all those great players is something a player in my position can only dream of.

With winning conference as the main goal, the UPS volleyball team strives to play with passion, maintain a growth mindset, and make their gym a “bubble of happiness” every day that supports their success all season. Kristen Lane shares, “UPS volleyball is about constant improvement in many dimensions: getting stronger, playing smarter, being a better teammate. We play to satisfy our competitive streaks, as a group of people relentlessly chasing a common goal is nearly unstoppable. We also play for camaraderie, because it makes winning that much sweeter”.
'We’ve done so much preparation that at this point we just had to trust our training and do what we love.’

Spotlight: Grayson Williams-Krebs

My favourite moment of this season so far... was probably after our last preseason game when we won 5-2. Every person on the team got to play, we had different people score, and we just ended a great preseason. I think that’s when we kind of showed people that we were going to be good this year, despite the adversity we faced. And it got us excited to start conference play.

For this year, I’m excited just to play our game- to score more goals than the other team and win games. We’ve done so much preparation that at this point we just had to trust our training and do what we love. I’m excited to show people that we’re a strong program.

Playing soccer at Puget Sound... has completely shaped my college experience. Being a student-athlete you don’t have the normal “college experience,” you don’t have the luxury of going places on the weekend, procrastinating of homework, or the flexibility of a schedule; you have to be disciplined and committed. But I’ve learned life skills that can’t be taught in the classroom, made some life long friends, and got to continue playing a sport I love.

If I could play for any professional team, it would be... FC Barcelona. But I’d play for the Portland Thorns, too—nothing beats a Portland atmosphere.

CHEER

The UPS cheer team supports the UPS athletic community by cheering for all home football and basketball games. The team is constantly learning new cheers, dances, and stunts in an attempt to better entertain spectators and cheer on the athletes.

Rebecca Zeglovitch, a member of the cheer squad since freshman year, states “I joined cheer during my freshman year, because I had been on dance team in high school and I knew that I wanted to continue to be a part of a team in college. Tryouts lasted a week and every day that I came back I got better and better, and really enjoyed learning the cheers and dances. Once I made the team, it was a great place to make friends and support our athletic community. Cheer has opened me up to meeting new people, and now that I’m a senior, I have enjoyed leading the team in a challenging and rewarding way.”

The cheer team has been at every football game they can, which is where you can always identify their spirited yells about a first down, dances that are in time with the pep band, and even their members jumping up and down with smiles on their faces in the rain.

The cheer team is not only a great outlet for exercises and an excuse to watch every football game, but also a place that fosters friendships. With practices that last 2-3 hours on average and workout routines, the cheer team is determined and devoted to spreading joy at different Logger sporting events.
NATE HESS

When I visited, I knew UPS was the school for me.

Nathan Hess (known as Nate to his friends and acquaintances) is a new student, this semester, a member of the class of 2020. He’s from Arlington, VA, loves Ultimate Frisbee, and directs the stage in his free time. He’s planning on majoring in Biology, but also open to new possibilities: “who knows what will happen?”

What made you want to come to Puget Sound?

I wanted to come to Puget Sound for a few reasons: I knew I wanted to be on the West Coast because I like it more. When I visited I automatically knew that UPS was the place for me.

What’s been the best thing about being on campus so far?

The best part of being on Campus would probably be all of the friends I’ve made from my classes and from the extracurricular activities I do!

How long have you been playing Ultimate Frisbee?

I’ve been playing Ultimate Frisbee since 7th Grade. My hometown has very established Middle and High School ultimate programs.

Why is Ultimate Frisbee important to you?

Ultimate frisbee is important to me because the community is so tight knit. The sport has an element to it called Spirit of The Game, which basically encourages sportsmanship and fair play, it encourages respect and friendship between players on opposite teams even in the most competitive moment. It is a really special thing.

You were a director in Town Crier Speaks. What was different about TCS from other directing experiences you’ve had, and what made you want to direct in TCS?

Town Crier Speaks festival had a level of Tech that was lower than I am used to honestly, in high school I had the entire tech theater class under my belt as a tool to do whatever I wanted with my show, This was not like that at all. I was given creative liberties in both high school and Town Crier festival that were very nice to have.

What do you think makes Puget Sound different from the other schools you applied to?

I don’t know what makes Puget Sound different, honestly. The vibe is just really different than say, Lewis and Clark. I think the way that the school encourages us to form a community is really nice.
Why did you come to UPS?
The website was easy to navigate compared to other college websites; I could find all the information I needed quickly. Also, they give me some money. I applied early, so while everyone else was stressing I was done December 15th.

What is your favorite and least favorite part of our university?
My favorite part has to be passages, and the first four months of UPS. My least favorite part is the administration and conduct processes. The gaslighting of non-liberal views bugs me.

How has UPS shaped you?
My cold tolerance has gotten better. I realize this is probably what public high school is like. My LGTBQ vocabulary has increased. Also, my flannel collection doubled in size.

What are your life aspirations?
I am all about that pursuit of happiness. That about sums it up.

A Day in the Life...
I wake up with great anticipation of many good things... then I decide which classes I will go to that day, based on whether I want breakfast and my overall energy level. Then, I freestyle with local youths to teach them about being a good citizen and going to college. Mastering new skills - I like to draw and do art. I like to bike and longboard. I usually do some soul searching throughout the day, if we are going to be real here. I like to engage in shenanigans with my housemates - I feel everyone does that but it is so necessary. Resisting temptations is something I do everyday. I spend a decent amount of time listening to music. The couch is where I spend the last hour of my night, stimulating my mind with various forms of media. To clarify, it is mainly nature documentaries.
Maloy Moore is currently a sophomore here at Puget Sound. She was a Passages leader and is involved in many things on campus, including being the founder of the club that does needlecrafting for charity.

Q: What are you involved in around campus and what do you find rewarding about those things?

A: The most important thing I do around campus would be my involvement with Peer Allies. Everyone deserves to be heard and validated, and helping create that space for people dealing with sexual assault and intimate partner violence is the thing I am most passionate about.

I am the President of the Needlecrafts for Charity club, and it’s really amazing to connect through creation. I never really considered myself an artist before I discovered knitting, and I’m continually amazed by how many different projects are possible. My goal is to someday knit a sweater, and so far I can make hats and scarves.

I am also part of Q&A as this year’s treasurer, a member of the Campus Cursive community, a member of Hiveminders (the bee-keeping club), part of the Civic Engagement Pathway, a member of Wixen (women and intersectional feminism), and I work at the library. There are many places of campus that I’m still excited to explore.

Q: What was the Passages experience like for you, and how was it different from being a passagee?

A: It’s impossible to compare one passages experience to another, even that of a passagee to a passages leader. Every group is different, and has different strengths and challenges. Logistically, it was different for me to stay at Camp Parsons instead of leaving for an trip (I went overnight-canoing as a freshman).

Honestly, if I would have left for an out-of-camp trip this year, I don’t know where I would have found the energy. By the last day (after being at camp for 8 days) I literally fell asleep mid-conversation. And I do mean that literally. The enormous amount of energy it takes to be a passages leader is a lower order consideration in comparison to all I gained from the experience. I met so many new and wonderful people, both in the leader community and with the first years. Somewhat surprisingly, I also learned a lot about myself. I’m still discovering more every day, and I hope I never stop.

I’ve never really considered myself full of school spirit, leaning more towards an optimistic but cynical perspective. A contradicting mix. But getting to introduce a whole new group of people to a place I call my home? That changed something in me, and made me really proud to go to Puget Sound. It sounds like the cheesiest thing ever, but when I was in the bleachers that first week listening to President Crawford and the other speakers, I felt proud.

To note on the speeches given, they were all wonderful. But one specifically stood out to me, and I would appreciate this chance to reflect on it. When Noah, our student body president, was speaking, I honestly felt like I could achieve anything. I want to embrace his message that coming to school with a certain kind of knowledge does not mean that anyone is done growing. While I came to school knowing a few things about gender and sexuality politics (even though I’m no master), I need to purposefully engage with race now, and for the rest of my life. I urge anyone reading this (especially other white people) to engage with identities that may be uncomfortable. Self care is also important.
Q: What’s the best thing you’ve had happen to you here?

A: My favorite structured moment was the Mary Lambert concert last year. She’s an artist that sings about queerness and mental health, and that’s really inspirational to me. Towards the end of the show, she called couples up to dance and sang her part from the Macklemore song. I know, it’s a ridiculous song, but I teared up watching a bunch of happy queer people dancing together.

The best moments for me are the unexpected ones that you can never plan. These usually happen after midnight, although not exclusively. One time, working late in the library, about one thirty in the morning, someone from Staff came down to the Info desk with a cookie-tray stacked with aloe-vera plants. She was going to toss them out, so I volunteered to give them a home. I was a proud parent of five aloes, and I gave three of them out over the rest of the year to people who needed an emotional boost. It was such an unexpected thing, and it made me so happy, and I was glad to share that happiness elsewhere.

Q: What do you think comes out of choosing to go to school here/ why did you come to The Puge?

A: I’ve found friends on campus that I hope to make a part of the rest of my life. I’m still working on finding my passions, my humor, and my humility. Puget Sound is definitely a stepping stone to get to whatever my future holds.
Jake Ashby stumbled into my life in my junior year, and in just two years he has showed me what it means to be a great friend, and even more just a genuinely wonderful person. Jake is a Business Leadership Program and Economics double major. He is a course assistant for economics under direct order by Peter Sullivan, and he was a football 2 year starter on the center offensive line. When an injury prevented him from continuing to play, he assumed an assistant coach-esque roll. Jake is also a member of Beta Theta Pi, as a founding father in the spring of freshman year. From there he has gone on to serve as Vice President of Recruitment to Vice President of New Member Education. He attributes some of his best friendships - with Zach Miller and Joey Randazzo - to his time in Beta that allowed these friendships to grow. Between being in the BLP, on the Football team, and a member of Beta Theta Pi, Jake has surrounded himself with caring individuals that soak up his positive energy and love watching him thrive. I know my life would not be the same had I not met Jake Ashby, and I know that I am not the only one that he made a lasting impact on in the UPS community.

Thank you for being who you are and giving so much to this community.

- Annie Vela
Lauren Griffin has played a key role in my life since I was lucky enough to meet her. She has accomplished so much in her time here at UPS. A member of the class of 2017, Lauren has been the Director of Business Services for ASUPS, the Personal and Chapter Enrichment Chairwoman in Gamma Phi Beta, The Director of Finance and Scholarship for the Panhellenic Council, a member of the Senior Class Gift Committee, a member of Phi Eta Sigma and Order of Omega, Lauren’s list of extracurriculars does not end. That being said, Lauren has been so much more to me than a list. She is so much more than the things that she has accomplished because what you don’t see in her credentials is her unwavering sense of friendship, loyalty and care. As a member of Gamma Phi Beta, Lauren says “being involved in G Phi has drastically altered my life. I wasn’t planning on going through recruitment but when I did, I found so much more than a chapter of women whom I admired, I also found a home.” It was being in greek life that empowered Lauren to be confident in herself and her capabilities, that lead her to try so many things and be in so many extracurriculars. I know that I am lucky enough to have had the honor of being Lauren’s friend, and I know that this campus would not be the same without her. - Annie Vela
Rachel Tanoue, a member of Kappa Alpha Theta, where she has served as Chief Administrative Officer and Chief Marketing Officer. “It’s the people who make it what it is,” she explains, and even as people grow and change, the Theta values hold the community together. “It’s all about celebrating differences,” she adds. On top of her extra-curriculars, Rachel also works at the new Lillis Cafe (and was a team member at the Cellar for three years before this). Her favorite smoothie is the Peachy Date, explaining that it tastes just like peach cobbler. She also writes as a blogger for the Office of Communications, and she has served as the ASUPS Senate Secretary since her Freshman year.

On a rainy day, she can likely be found in one of two moods: either highly productive and cleaning her house, or in bed with hot chocolate and YouTube videos. And when asked what color crayon she would be, she chose cerulean blue, like the ocean. “It is both calm and rough, and full of life. The sky, too, is blue. It’s full and empty at the same time, but never lonely.”
ROSS MULHAUSEN

After the centennial anniversary of UPS in 1988, Ross Mulhausen, a freelance photographer at the time, joined the school community. Some of his work is currently displayed in a variety of places including the banners in the new Athletes and Aquatic Center, UPS website and the Arches Magazine.

Ross photographs both small and large events all around campus from student performances to orientation requested by every department. It seems like there is always something big going on such as commemorations, collaborations or new insights in the world of academia.

One aspect that Ross enjoys about his position is his unspoken relationship with those he photographs. While Ross may be a stranger, there is a comfortableness in others that silently acknowledges permission for their picture to be taken. Ross has grown confident in covering events with many strangers. His goal is to present a positive reflection of people and always asks himself if there is anything he can improve on.

Ross stated, “I’m flattered when students recognize me and call me by my name”. When Ross travels, he often bumps into people associated with UPS whether it is an alumnus, faculty, staff or students. UPS may have a small campus, but Ross has watched the UPS network expand in the last few decades.
Originally known as Kittredge Hall, the building on the east side of campus was in fact the first student union building. It was constructed in 1941 and named after John M. Kittredge, whose daughter Grace left a cash bequest to the college for a building “helpful to young people.” Today, Kittredge serves as the fine arts building, and houses two public art galleries.

The gallery has long served as a “teaching tool” for the Puget Sound Art & Art History Department, as well as supporting the university as a whole. Kittredge has a strong history of exhibitions and artist talks, and continues to contribute to the broader cultural community of the Pacific Northwest. This fall, the gallery hosted the Bill Colby Retrospective exhibition, featuring the work of a former UPS professor. In addition, summer resident’s work was displayed around the gallery. In October, the Past and Present Faculty Exhibition opened, and over the winter the gallery will be home to the Alumni Exhibition and an Art History Alumni Colloquium. In the spring, the student-curated exhibition of Abby Williams Hill paintings opens.

The Slater Museum of Natural History was founded in 1930 as the Puget Sound Museum of Natural History. Though it was established as a collection of reptiles and amphibians by James R. Slater, the museum is now a well-curated collection of specimens used for research and education.

This Fall, the museum is interested in expanding their visibility on campus, in order to ensure that all UPS students know about the Slater and the opportunities that it offers. All members of the community are encouraged to visit, whether you have an interest in natural history, museum collections, science-based art or museum work. Additionally, the museum is collecting feedback on an incredible new insect collection: last year the Slater received a donation of hundreds of preserved insects, and has been showcasing them at events around town and on campus. The Slater’s AmeriCorps member, Martha Cerda, has been working on fostering the Nature in the Classroom program, offered to fourth and fifth grade students throughout the Puget Sound area.

The Night at the Museum Event was hosted in October, and gave visitors an inside look at the research and teaching specimens that make up the Slater. Drawing Night was held in November, welcoming community members to draw some of the museum’s specimens.

Senior docents Sarah Mueller and Megan Reich agree that working at the Slater Museum has been “an enriching experience.” Mueller explains that “it’s a place of not only research and education, but inspiration... vital to our understanding” of environmental issues. Reich adds that she is “always learning something new from [her] peers within the supportive atmosphere of Slater, and it has been a privilege to work with them.”
COLLINS MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Collins Memorial Library is the predominant place of study and inquiry on campus. No other building holds such a diverse set of majors and interests, all pursuing the common goal of knowledge. Collins was built in 1954, with new additions completed in 1974 and 2000. The building is named for former trustee Everell S. Collins, and support from the Collins family continues today. Many of the tables and chairs throughout the library were in fact custom built for the building from Collins’ Lumber.

Research starts at Collins with a team of wonderful librarians dedicated to different majors. Without these superheroes, research would near impossible. Come finals week, Collins Memorial stays up with its students, encouraging them to solve the last equation or write the last line.

Collins Memorial goes beyond the typical college library. Stumble in at the right time and you could find a trio of harpists playing. Or perhaps you find yourself lost in one of their featured art and special collections exhibits. The wide array of fine arts featured in the library engage students in subjects far beyond what they are studying. This extra stimulation proves invaluable when studying becomes difficult.

THE COMMUNITY GARDEN

A community that eliminates the idea of a campus bubble.

As part of Harvest Pierce County, the UPS Community Garden is a group of people dedicated to sustainability and community outreach. The garden offers free and donation-based harvest parties. The mission of the group is to give an example of community outreach and sustainability throughout the UPS community, offering harvest parties and produce markets regularly. The goal of the group is to get the campus involved in with the garden and to experience what it means to be part of a community. The club is a space for individuals to come together to “share knowledge and love for all aspects of gardening.” The garden and its subsequent club are open to everyone and is entirely student-run. The garden is also intended for educational gardening, learning, and interests regarding all things nature. Classes involving first to fourth years use the space as a means for hands-on learning, as well as a space to learn new things. All of the students who work in the garden get to take home the veggies they grow. Herbs are also provided to the Diner in order to allow all students the opportunity to enjoy the fruits of the labor of fellow classmates.
The Puget Sound Community Garden’s entrance is as open as its mission. The bright red doors and welcome sign offer up a sense of community that you can find nowhere else on campus. The vegetables grown here are all student-cared for and are a delicious addition to the Diner’s meals. The harvest parties allow students, staff, and faculty to enjoy all of the work the students have put into the garden and inspire people to join every day.
SUSTAINABILITY SERVICES

Have you ever wondered who handles the sustainable disposal of what we throw away?

Sustainability Services, a branch of Facilities Services, is an organization almost entirely student-run that dedicates its time and effort to making sure we, as Loggers, are living sustainably.

The program was initially established to take care of recycling, but since its start, it has adapted to help Logger society divert waste through the proper channels to keep our campus living green. Those familiar signs that tell us which can to put our recycling in, or what to do with our cardboard boxes are a large part of the work Sustainability Services does. They process all of that waste that goes in there, as well as redirect more unusual trash items we tend not to think about, like styrofoam, furniture, or batteries.

Puget Sound has a strong commitment to being a sustainable campus, and Sustainability Services makes it their goal to support that. The program even spends time campaigning for responsible recycling and trash management off campus.

To create a sense of community inside the program in order to foster the best environment for developing more ways to help the campus, Sustainability Services promotes intelligence and a friendly environment, as well as offer opportunities to show leadership and to grow as a group.

If there’s ever any uncertainty about how to properly dispose of a particular material not already covered by the signs near disposal areas, Sustainability Services is happy to help.

2016 ELECTION

From the Primaries in March to November’s Presidential election, 2016 has been a whirlwind. When the news finally came that Donald Trump would be the next president, many were shocked. Several had argued that there was a slim chance of Trump’s win, and then he managed to pull a win out of left field. It was at this time that many members of the Puget Sound community came together to discuss and experience one another’s stories together. Candidates on both sides had policy not everyone agreed with, but the Puget Sound community was able to come through with opportunities for student and faculty to come together to discuss the results of the election. Many concerned themselves with the future of the country with a new president, others were more concerned with the state of the future of the Democratic party. Some attributed what they felt as similar to feelings of 9/11. Whether liberal or conservative, many students, faculty, and staff were grateful for the opportunity for thoughts to be expressed and conversations to be had. While others attended this information session, others attended “safe spaces” for people of color, LGBT+ members, and for the general student body. All around, many were able to communicate their feelings and thoughts about the upcoming four years and what it means for everyone.
Did I ever tell you about the young Zode,
Who came to two signs at the fork in the road?
One said to Place One, and the other, Place Two.
So the Zode had to make up his mind what to do.
Well...the Zode scratched his head, and his chin and his pants.

And he said to himself, “I’ll be taking a chance
If I go to Place One. Now, that place may be hot!
And so, how do I know if I’ll like it or not?
On the other hand though, I’ll be sort of a fool
If I go to Place Two and find it too cool.
In that case I may catch a chill and turn blue!
So, maybe Place One is the best, not Place Two,
But then again, what if Place One is too high?
I may catch a terrible earache and die!
So Place Two may be best! On the other hand though...
What might happen to me if Place Two is too low?
I might get some very strange pain in my toe!
So Place One may be best,” and he started to go.
Then he stopped, and he said, “On the other hand though....

On the other hand...other hand...other hand though...”
And for 36 hours and a half that poor Zode
Made starts and made stops at the fork in the road.
Saying, “Don’t take a chance. No! You may not be right.”

Then he got an idea that was wonderfully bright!
“Play safe!” cried the Zode. “I’ll play safe. I’m no dunce!
I’ll simply start out for both places at once!”
And that’s how the Zode who would not take a chance
Got no place at all with a split in his pants.

You have brains in your head.
You have feet in your shoes.
You can steer yourself in any direction you choose.
You’re on your own.
And you know what you know.
You are the guy who’ll decide where to go.
We all have a story to tell.
