Intercollegiate Prohibition Association

Hervey F. Smith,
Vice President and Traveling Secretary for Pacific Coast.

Peter J. Youngdahl, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Minnesota, and one of the leaders in that movement in the United States, told me last winter in Minneapolis that he would not be in the temperance work today, had it not been for the Prohibition League in Gustavus Adolphus College when he was in school. During his senior year he was state president of the College Prohibition Association of Minnesota.

E. S. Shumaker, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Indiana, obtained his training and inspiration for the work as member of the Prohibition League of DePauw University.

Walter E. Critchlow is state secretary of the Prohibition Party in Oregon, and was one of the "commanding generals" in the recent fight for state prohibition. Yet he is a young man, having graduated only three years ago from Dallas College and it was as a member of the Prohibition League there that he received the inspiration to fight the liquor power.

In Iowa, all the temperance organizations are united in one gigantic crusade for prohibition under the Allied Temperance Committee.

The University Carnival To Be

With the score 6 to 5 against it, the University of Puget Sound football team yesterday morning turned defeat into victory in its contest with the Bellingham Normal school eleven on the U. P. S. campus by securing a touchdown within the last few minutes of play. The final score was 11 to 6 in favor of U. P. S. The ball had been kept in Bellingham territory throughout the major portion of the game, but until the last three minutes of play in the final quarter the local team lacked one point of securing a tie.

The second touchdown was scored by the university lads principally through the line backs of Benadom and Decker. The quarter opened with the ball on Bellingham's 17-yard line, but the Methodists could not advance the pigskin and lost it on downs. The Normal school men kicked to their 23-yard line and secured the ball again by a fumble. They were soon forced to kick; however, and when the kick failed Benadom, the university's little fullback, fell on the ball. Half a dozen plays were tried before the Methodists forced the ball within striking distance of the goal. Benadom finally advanced the ball from the Bellingham 5-yard line to within two feet of the goal line, and then it was an easy matter for Decker at right half to score the university's last touchdown and turn defeat into victory. The goal was then kicked.

Max Makes Great Run.

The feature play of the afternoon was in the first quarter when the Methodist team secured its first score. Max, playing left end, circled around the opposing team and ran 75 yards to a touchdown. Goal was missed.

Bellingham came back strong in the second quarter and on a series of line intercollegiate plays tried before the Methodist team forced the ball within striking distance of the goal. Benadom finally advanced the ball from the Bellingham 5-yard line to within two feet of the goal line, and then it was an easy matter for Decker at right half to score the university's last touchdown and turn defeat into victory. The goal was then kicked.

We have just had another example of the fact that eccen trical councils composed of men may make mistakes, and condemn a man who is greater than any one of their members. Count Leo Tolstoi has passed beyond this world into the great unknown. The world looks with curious wonder at the synod which may decide whether he may rest far more than will many and perhaps most of the things which Count Tolstoi uttered, we can never lose sight of the fact that ecumenical councils with many and perhaps most of the synod which may decide whether he may rest far more than will many and perhaps most of the abstract virtues and vices, inherent in human nature. A brief resume of the plot will assuredly arouse interest in her dramatic effort.

Everyfresbman, the leading character, is doomed by the Faculty to pass through the Pit of Exams, because he has neglected his daily readings. Bulletin announces his fate to him. Everyfresbman, accordingly, seeks his friends and beseeches them to accompany him through the Pit. But one after another, Roommate, Cousin, Dog, Gyril Fyrend, all fall him. After these fair-weather friends have deserted him, Cribbie and Bluffe pledge their friendship and promise faithfu lly to help him. They bring him a "pony" which Everyfresbman mounts with difficulty. Thus equipped and accompanied, he enters the Pit, but at the crucial moment Cribbie and Bluffe both desert him. Then Common Sense and Good Works come to the rescue and lead him through the Pit.

The play ends with a chorus in the distance singing one of the college songs.

The cast of characters is as follows:

Everyfresbman, Faculty, Roommate, Cousin, Gyril Fyrend, Mary White, Edgar Morford, Louis Benbow, Marguerite Munro, Clyde Work, Lyle Ford, Ralph Weaver.

TOLSTOI.

For some 40 years Count Lyof Niko­lavitich Tolstoi, who died yesterday morning unrescuedly to an aristocra­tic wife and the dogmatic church, was greater than the Russian government. He defied his carz time and again. He was the soul of the intellec­tual revolutionists of Russia and most of Eu­rope. Time and again his followers and his publishers suffered from govern­mental anger, but the leader was immune. No doubt the czar often wished Tolstoi's head, but he feared the consequences of taking it.

Born in 1828, rich in money and lands and a member of the nobility, he first served his country as an artil­lery lieutenant at terrible Sebastopol. Shortly afterward he began espousing the ideas that were to make him a world character. He began organizing peasant schools, co-operative publish­ing concerns, methods for the relief of the needy and for mental and moral uplift throughout Russia. He gave up the enjoyments of the benefits of the copyright law and practically surren­dered rights to his own large estates. He dressed as a peasant and lived in a bare and uninventing but near the mansion that housed his aristocratic wife and children. He dined with his family but not on the same fare. Where levered footmen served dainties to wife and children at one end of the table, austere Tolstoi, unattended, sat at the other in the garb of a working­man, eating the simplest of fare. Tolstoi endeavored to follow the footsteps of Christ. He believed in the rights of man. Now and then he went beyond the bounds of common sense as it is given to most of the world to judge. When he uttered a fulsome de­fense of the Doukhobors his appeal was regarded as that of a man un­poised. His last act in fleeing from home has not been fully explained. It may have been a great radical's final protest against the con­ditions he so long had opposed.

Tolstoi was in earnest. Honor is difficult to find in his works. He saw the saddest side of life, high and low, and not often the joyous side of either. Some of his writings will long endure. Possibly the story of his life will live longer than his literary product. Possibly it is the character of his life—his firm defiance of those things Russians most hate—that has lifted him to his pinnacle, rather than the literary aspect of his books and papers. He was a human, kindly, grim philos­opher who for half a century cultivated the germ of revolution in the cauz's domain, completely fearless of conse­quences. He came and went as he pleased when thousands of lesser fires were quenched in the dark fortresses of the Neva and in the bleak wilder­nesses of Siberia. In his choice of coarse dress and plain manner of liv­ing he selected the best method of empha­sizing his protest. Immediately he reached the masses. His name alone was enough to reach the aristocracy. The world has lost a unique character.
Adams led the devotional meeting and Woman as a Mother. She told us that the training an average college girl had for her subject "The College taught how sound travels, when what#the future when she becomes a home received is not adequate for her in the she needs is to know how to stop that-she did not value the opportunity to attend the Y. W. C. A. meeting, until from the meeting.

Our girls our association rooms. Our girls served from chafing dishes in true college style.

And among the students were several other members of our faculty. It was a fine talk the doctor gave us and it would be such an inspiration to us if all of our teachers would attend the meeting and give us such helpful talks. The students want you and we would do our best to make you feel welcome.

On Thursday evening each week, 7 p. m.

If there had been four more men present Tuesday noon, we would have had a record-breaking attendance. The fifty-three men who were there can certainly put themselves on the back for the opportunity of listening to the extremely interesting and instructive talk, which Prof. Cummins gave on the subject of "Missions, and Their Real Duty."

Next Tuesday in the Preachers' room Mr. Crockett will lead on the subject: "A Personality." Without doubt this will be a good, interesting meeting. Help add to the interest by your presence.

There are an even hundred men in our Y. M. M. Men, what we must have now is the united working power pulling in the one direction—that is, that we may accomplish the purpose for which we are organized.

The Last Appearance

By Maude Walker.

"Tink you'll make you 8 o'clock class?" Tom asked, but his companions were both too dejected to answer. The sun had partly dried their clothes and made them fairly comfortable, but the worst was yet to come. News of the capture that the faculty had made passed quickly around the campus, and everyone walking past the chapel building seemed to pause, and gaze. Several newspaper reporters from the windows of nearby buildings snapped pictures of the three during sophomores, for sophomore lads they were. Every instructor in the college went by between 7 and 8, and each man gravely lifted his hat in triumphant salutation to the figures overhead.

Tom kept his temper throughout the entire ordeal, making fun of his companions, and occasionally calling to chums who passed on the campus.

Finally Dick burst out something like this: "It's the faculty's doings, anyway. Well, I can stand it, just so they don't bring in the old gag about it's hurting them more than it does us."

And he carefully shifted his position on the roof.

Just as the clock in the tower struck 8 and all the students were hurrying to their classes, there was a grating sound, the trap door was pushed up, and the janitor stuck his head through the opening. Although disinclined to show too great anxiety to reach firm ground, the trio made all due haste out of their cramped and stiffened limbs would permit. Before parting, they shook hands all around and Tom solemnly said: "In the words of the preacher, we are a sadder, but a better bunch." In the evening mail Tom received a small piece of paper; under the first sheet there was a piece of tracing paper, and on the second was an exact reproduction of the note he had written to Elsie, and failed to destroy. "Well, I declare!" was his only comment.

DEBATE—WAS HAMLET MAD?

The debate given by the Elizabethan Drama class was a spacy test of argument. The question read, "Resolved, that Hamlet was mad." Miss Berna Miller, as the first speaker on the affirmative, stated the standpoint for her colleagues, defining madness, according to the modern standard of insanity, also putting forth their standard of Hamlet as afflicted with paranoia. Miss Strand and Towne, enlarged upon the first speaker's premise by extracts from the play, showing by his means Hamlet's loss of natural affection toward his mother, Ophelia, the king and his friends.

Miss Holman explained the egocentric tendencies of the hero, also applying his actions of pride, fear, vanity and suspicion to prove that Hamlet was a paranoia.

Mr. Simpson closed the affirmative side by a summary of the points of the affirmative, giving their references from modern scientific medical authorities. Mr. Simpson emphasized the evidences of paranoia as displayed by Hamlet, the egocentric, homicidal, and suicidal tendencies.

The negative side was first supported by Mr. George Day, who enlarged, limited and explained the definition submitted by the affirmative. The close of his speech was a general application of the definition to the play Hamlet, as proofs of his sanity at the beginning of the drama.

Miss Day, the third negative speaker, developed Hamlet's character as the production of Wittenberg school, likewise the anathema of his mind and his duty and plan. Throughout she explained his actions as the intuition or instinctive results of a trained mind, absolutely under control.

Miss McGandy brought out proofs of his sanity from outside sources, explaining the change in the different quarters, and gave many examples of actors and critics who believe Hamlet sane.

Miss Ford closed the debate, refuting the affirmative arguments and summing up the points made by her colleagues.

Eight minutes were given to each speaker but the time was found entirely too short for the material ready.

Mrs. Thomas Scott, Profs. Elchoiter and Cummins kindly consented to act as judges for the debate and unanimously decided for the negative.

The debate was a simple class affair but showed that energetic, enthusiastic students can do much. Perhaps at another time there will be one to follow. We hope so for although this was the initial attempt for several, the results were entirely satisfactory.
A college rises or falls by its courtesy or its negligence or wilful disregard for simple civility. When athletic rivalry and corruption in debate and oratory are keen it is sometimes a temptation to a student body to revert to the law of tooth and fang to gain a victory or avenges an insult but boomerang like these methods mean self injury. Invariably the college that is courteous is the ultimate victor, seeming defeat may endure for a time but the final triumph of the finer spirit is as certain as the course of the sun. The college that throws its doors open to its rivals, that heaps attentions upon all comers, will be the school to attract ever increasing numbers to its halls, to gain ground in intercollegiate activities, to build a reputation for hospitality, courtesy and refinement, and to send forth men and women imbued with sweetest spirits, strongest ambition and noblest ideals.

For his school's sake as well as for his own interest no college man can neglect this which means so much for advancing the cause for which the college stands.

COMMERCIAL BASKET-BALL.

To state the fact mildly, the Commercial students were amazed at the unusual and unbusinesslike manner in which the third year Academy flaunted their challenge to our basketball team for a game.

If they have an organized team they neglected to consult Coach Riley, who has charge of all schedules, and failed to submit any sort of a written challenge to the manager or any other office of our team and further, asked or gave a game six weeks before the basketball season opens. Later the sneering epithets used by some members of the third year class confirmed our belief that the challenge was merely an attempt to play smart before the assembled students.

Whenever the third years submit their proposals in a proper and businesslike manner, we assure them courteous consideration. Until they do so, we shall ignore them, as they deserved to be ignored.

FIRST YEARS ENTERTAIN SECOND YEARS.

The second years were royally entertained by the first at the pleasant home of Miss Ruth Wilson on Friday of last week.

The beautiful decorations together with class colors and amusing games made the evening a continuous round of pleasure.

The leading stars of the program received were Doll Beardsley and Little Evelyn Louder. Ice cream and cake were served, toasts of loyalty offered by members of both classes and as the hour drew near that all must bid the host and hostess a found adieu, they returned to their respective homes after being properly chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Solder.

THE INTERCOLLEGIATE PROHIBITION ASSOCIATION.

trained for the responsible position that he holds today.

Here are four young men, leaders in the fight against the saloon in four widely separated states—all in the fight for life—and all trained by the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association.

Then there is the College Prohibition Quartette from John R. Street University, which spent three months last summer stumping Florida for the "drys."

There were thirty or more students who spent their vacations campaigning under the prohibition committee in Minnesota, others in New York, Illinois, Michigan and elsewhere.

The capital city of Nebraska went "dry" last spring because the students of four universities in that city voted and worked to make it so.

The brewery trust is the sixth largest in the United States. It represents a capital of $50,000,000. But it must go. The fight in behalf of the saloon is without hope. The liquor trade is spending millions in defense. It has numerous organizations in every state. But it has not yet shown the nerve to try to organize the students of America in defense of "booze."

5,000 of these students in over 150 colleges and universities today organize and studying the liquor problems and 350 every year are writing orations, but not one in defense of beer. And the college movement is only beginning.

The third affirmative speaker, after examining the structure which his colleagues had erected, planted a support of authority here and tackled on a brace from internal evidence, polished the model a little by reviewing what had been said and then retired feeling that surely their arguments was invulnerable. But there are also certain advantages, as was stated above, on both sides and here the negative made use of one of the best prerogatives that they have, namely, of shifting the issue. For this reason the affirmative side in almost any debate should prepare a line of argument for every possible shift, otherwise a great part of their effort will be lost, or to say the least they will be thrown into confusion. The affirmative said madness was a form of insanity, and Hamlet exhibited such characteristics, hence Hamlet was mad. The negative said madness was a form of insanity, and Hamlet exhibited characteristics of same, but he did it sanely, that is—determinedly for a purpose—or in other words, Hamlet feigned madness, hence was not, and could not possibly have been mad, all of which was true.

EXCHANGES

By Samuel Dupertius.

The Messenger, the organ of the Bellingham State Normal, is a bright, artistically gotten up paper of high literary worth. It gives evidence of a wide awake student body. We quote from its pages an excerpt from a lecture delivered in their auditorium by Dr. Stanton Coit of London, on "The Spiritual Awakening of England."

"This is an age of democratic humanitarianism. England has said, 'We will have no more pauperism. We will tax the rich to support the poor, instead of taxing the poor to support the rich. You will have no pauper children, no pauper sick. And the political economists say it will be cheaper.' "

"Signs of awakening are shown in religion. Ministers are now preaching the identity of the divine with the highest human. The divine life is a growth from within—Christ incarnate. There must be an environment favorable to character. Children have a right to be born with a predisposition to self-control. The time will come when a drunken father and a degenerate mother will not be allowed to bring seven or eight idiots into the world.

"It is worse to begot a life that is wrong than to take life; as serious to bring children into the world who are predisposed to crime, as to commit murder or to set fire to a building."

This is wholesome and timely teaching and we congratulate the Messenger in publishing it.

The boys who per chance are tiring unnecessarily upon the ragouts of a hatchet's hall will appreciate the following:

To board, or not to board; that is the question.

Wither 'tis best to suffer indigestion or live on bakery stuffs.

To live! To bath! Perforce to cook: Ay, there's the rub!

For in the dead of night what dreams may come

When we have baked our biscuits undone,

Or burnt our bacon, and supplied the lack

With strong, black coffee, or flint-like hard-tack.

And so the question staggered e'en the wise—

To board, or hatch, or starve—Who'll sympathize?

—H. P. in The Messenger.

Ceesar's dead and buried,

And so is Cicero.

And where these two gentlemen go

I wish their works would go.

Old Ceesar's battles were all shams,

His commentaries rusty.

He had to take our exams,

He'd say, "Veni, vidi, busti."

In spite of the rain and wind the Amphiectyons had a full house Monday evening. The program was an improvement over the one of the week before. Everyone enjoyed the solo by Miss Davies. She always sings well. Mr. Waggoner’s “Biography” of a “Turkey” was very interesting as well as instructive. Miss Luderman gave a piano solo, which was very entertaining. Mr. Mulford’s reading was very well given, as was also Mr. Luke’s solo.

Mr. Crump was not able to get there in time to give his “Original Thanksgiving” until after the business meeting was called. It was indeed very good. We are sorry he could not have arrived sooner.

Mr. Wallace was taken into the society Monday evening. The business meeting was lively and interesting. Next Monday night we elect new officers.

The exchanges are few this week and we can not give our readers as newsy a column as we had wished. It is our purpose to bring our school into touch with all the leading colleges of the country, especially of the Pacific Coast. In our opinion the Exchange column should contain real news from other colleges—what they are doing, as well as excerpts from the cream of their papers. We invite all Exchange editors to cooperate with us in this effort.

The exchanges are few this week and we can not give our readers as newsy a column as we had wished, It is our purpose to bring our school into touch with all the leading colleges of the country, especially of the Pacific Coast. In our opinion the Exchange column should contain real news from other colleges—what they are doing, as well as excerpts from the cream of their papers. We invite all Exchange editors to cooperate with us in this effort.
