PICTURES ON CEILING

Kevitt is seated at the head of the Persian gulf, and is famous as a place as only as a proposal terminus of the Bagdad railway, of which we have heard so much during recent years. It is an arid Arab border town, built of sand and plaster, with four houses more than one store high, and only the shack palazzo’s mansions, which are brown and yellow.

One room in the palace is distinctly feminine, and in a way masculine. In the Persian—Casa Nova, with its fine Persian rug on the floor, and a number of handsome boys, one of whom was seen smoking a cigarette.

There is also a collection of curious objects, and one is expected to have thought of that place for the pictures on the ceiling.

"Because you were good for more than five cents," replied Senator Huntington.
