The present week has brought to mind again one of the most cherished possessions of our college—the Color Post. Monday morning at the chapel period, following a speech by Dr. Todd, the students voted to take the responsibility of subscribing enough money to pay for the erection of a new post over the Color Post.

To some, the expenditure of $200 to put a "shanty over the stamp," as some of our building insects express it, seems to be a useless waste of money. At first thought, it might be declared that there are more important or more useful things that could be done at the present time. Undoubtedly, there are. But there are also things that seem important and right, although they can not be measured in dollars and cents. The Color Post is one of those commonsense propositions, and Dr. Todd was right in calling the attention of the students to it.

It is true that courts would be desirable, but it is also true that they must be finished according to the present plans. This involves a value in tradition, which, although it can not be measured in dollars and cents, is none the less real and important for the students. The Administration has prepared a field for football better advantage in the construction of tennis courts. It is impossible to determine the exact value of this field, but it is certain that the students would be interested in the introduction of tennis courts. It is true that courts would be desirable, but it is also true that they must be finished according to the present plans. This involves a value in tradition, which, although it can not be measured in dollars and cents, is none the less real and important for the students.

Well.

The story of the spendthrift farmer who fathered a daughter, but would not have any more children, is something which is to be found in book form, and will make a sale. But, the other atop, "don't come on that afternoon. Then we went to Ned's to town and baseball all the afternoon.
