Library Should Be Functioning Unit

Writing an article in the magazine of the Association of College and Reference Libraries, Warren L. Perry, College of Puget Sound librarian, emphasized the need for a library to function as a unit.

The article, "The Small College Library," was published in the Association's magazine, the American Library Association, in May 1958.

"The small college library can remain a functioning unit," wrote Mr. Perry, "by requiring the use of materials, the running of the necessary office, and by the use of materials which are available for the faculty and students in the institution."
What Do We Want? Peace Lost

If we have war, we may be assured that peace was not appreciated. Peace is something talked much about in wartimes but not so much in peacetimes. It is something that we take for granted and do not realize its value until it is too late.

Peace is the time we could have used to better advance our civilization. Had we not wasted two years of World War I, we could have used that time to better advance our civilization.
