"spring has sprung"

"Spring has sprung," as the poets say, and with the inter­penetration of sunshine between the raindrops the annual male hibernation of spring fever has hit the campus and hit it hard. Once again a good portion of the student body is pack­ing their luggage for home with lofty, intellectual intentions of being out of the way for the rest of the Spring Quarter. It most definitely be accomplished.

But what happens to the student's earnest desire to cram? Wednesday he leaves for home; Thursday, he spends with his family, getting acquainted again. Friday he makes plans for the fabulous week-end to come. Friday night, of intensive study which must definitely be accomplished.

What do you do each Wednesday at 6:15? Through the Trail and other sources of the "lousy" home shows, the members get together in a joint operation to display the newest marine products of the Northwest. Home shows are received by the Trail and other sources of the "lousy" home shows.

By JOHN KLEINBERG

"Art began with the Cro-Magnon. No one knows precisely when, or exactly who, or why. It may be, if you read the ancient newspapers, that art was the first language and fact the last language of magic. That ancient seesaw, 'Knowledge is power,' was reversed, and the great whack who drew the bull on cave walls in the Pyrenees. The red clay of the bull lesion was an uncompromisingly designed to render up the soul of the great beast. In fact, sometimes the man won, occasionally the bull, man; or beast; man or beast, or man. The victory was affiliated to the strength of the imagination—ability of the art."

The Vincent van Gogh exhibit at the Seattle Art Museum should make art clear. Although I have visited the show, there are no words which I can use to review it like the cave paintings, van Gogh's works must be seen and experienced to know their meaning.

For words too, are an outgrowth of magic. They contain an essential bit in and order it about. This occurs in the case of van Gogh. He is his paintings, his red poppy in the salad. When newly wet the pebbles, he would throw them into warm and vividly, but as the pebbles become cold and dried, and so is life. So must be used words. So must be used.

"Art is important, his math, his logic, and technique, and your knowledge. It is as if you think, in a given time, miles due north, they exist, and you may as of an old friend's evening or commentary and if you view them you will surely have an experience of a lifetime."

It is also, however, a tantalizing or Dr. Seuss when one thinks of him as one who knows the price of everything and the worth of nothing. In the atmosphere of the lib- rary arts college one is supposed to acquire a wide background of knowledge from diverse different arts as possible. Few of us shall be able to acquire the greater part of our time even if we try to learn little beyond the content of our right hand. We know the prices, but not the worth of other things.

In this contest Dr. Condlor has remarked that students generally have a healthy, and sometimes a healthy, respect for the opinions of their classmates.

A few students have decided that the answer to this problem in the free exchange of ideas among and between members of the students. Under the leadership of Ton Barks and with the advice of Dr. John Magie, they have formed an organization which intends to discuss the underlying ideas of everything from G. O. and Astro- physics, to B. A. (or Music the- ory) and Philosophy. They say that they want to know what the Education department is and what political science has to do with the molecular structure of the atom.

Barry says that the first meet- ing will be held Wednesday evening last week after spring vaca- tion. The program is as yet, un- covered, but will pattern itself after the old Franklin clubs.

There will be no membership dues and no initiation fees. It's date or past, in your hat. April 4, in the Student lounge of the Sub— it may be a very lively organization. All students are welcome.
