

Unseemingly Sudden

Our love so sudden and so quick it was,
Holding back and yet still letting go.
I wanted to be near you just because,
Good taste in mushrooms? And you were sold.
In September when the sun still came around,
We soaked it up along with cigarette smoke,
That's when you showed me words that made the sweetest sound,
As I sat there listening just trying not to choke.
In our tight group no one knew our secret,
Sneaking out late at night you had my heart in your hand,
I was started having second thoughts if you should keep it,
My new world a place where you just might be banned.

Yet before I could reach out to take it right back,
You squeezed close your fingers in an unseemingly attack.
